That was tongue-in-cheel, Kevin.What evidence are you in search of?
Something that illustrates hammies getting popped out of band? I already

Why the need to place words in my mouth? Tsk tsk,,,really, Kevin. You know I made no such claim. But if you would like to introduce the topic,,,,then, yes, I agree a fair amount of freebanders are hammies. To ignore this is ignorance.

I will answer your question after you answer the one posed to you above..,,I repeat.... why did you feel the need to deliberately misattribute your quote to myself?

(shrug) What you choose to believe or not is up to you, but to claim your mistaken belief as fact won't fly. If you pay attention to what the FCC does, you would have seen at the beginning of the summer several hammies were popped for freebanding, and they weren't tracked down by salivating wannabe radio cops, no,,,,nothing so proactive,,,,they were turned in by their fellow hammies who recognized their voices. Simply because you are unable to comprehend why people behave in certain manners and commit certain acts, doesn't negate it taking place.

Which is a piss-poor idea for many reasons already given. Too many ego-tripping power mongers in hammie radio full of piss and malice. Some Here you go again. Not one case has resulted in an NAL notice merely for a reporting by an observer,,,not one. You are making false claims about this program once again. The law is clear. The FCC MUST witness the infraction. A letter of warning is ALWAYS sent prior to action by the FCC.

> Occasionally the fool will continue and the

CP,
It's actually called a 'Double Bazooka' antenna and has been around for ever. While it appears to be broaderbanded than a 1/2 wave dipole, the problem is that the radiation efficiency tapers off as you get to the extremes of the frequency coverage. It will still show a low SWR, but because of several things (reactances mostly), the radiation level decreases so that you actually aren't radiating any more than if you were using a 1/2 wave dipole with a high SWR. The net gain over a common 1/2 wave dipole is zero.
It is a fairly 'quiet' antenna, not quite as much noise as
the common dipole. At HF the diameter of the conductors make no difference in the antenna's being broadbanded. The diameter has to be increased to a sizable percentage of a wave length before it really makes any appreciable difference. Something like 6 feet diameter at 80 meters, and around 2 feet at 10/11 meters.
There is a formula for this type of antenna. You need to know the velocity factor for the kind of coax you use. Cut the total length of the dipole for (468/f{in Mhz}) = L1. Find the electrical 1/2 wave length by multiplying this L1 by the coax's velocity factor = L2. Subtract L2 from L1, divide it by two, and that's how far from each end to short the inner conductor and braid. The rest of the antenna is done as in the example.
There's a pretty good examination of coaxial dipoles in one of
the ARRL's Antenna Compendium books.
'Doc

PS - The 'CCD' or Controled Capacitance Distribution antenna is a whole 'nuther animal.

That quote was in reference to the state of radio prior to the Radio Act of 1912, which established laws preventing amateurs from interfering with government stations. And in case you are not up on your radio history, there were no broadcast stations before 1912, mainly because there was no broadcast band. Even if there -was- a broadcast band, you wouldn't have heard many broadcasts because radio at the time was almost exclusively CW.

The problem with historical accounts is that they mean nothing unless they can be corroborated with either facts or similar and credible accounts. Certainly there were, and have always been, a few morons that couldn't keep from meddling in the broadcast bands. But there is no evidence that these people were exclusively hams, or even that such activity was the cause of, as you say, a "terrific source of trouble" for early broadcasters.

I have read many, many books on radio history, including countless descriptions of old radio broadcasts, and none of them have ever mentioned anything about hams causing interference with Will Rogers, Amos and Andy, or any other early radio broadcasts. On the contrary, early broadcasting -did- have it's troubles as I explained before: Too many stations pumping up the power to drown out the competition, transmitters without tight frequency control causing squeals and hisses in the receivers (don't forget that a lot of the receivers were regens), and no regulation beyond the issuance of licenses.

To wit:

http://www.californiahistoricalradio.com/100years.html
http://www.oldradio.com/archives/general/clears.htm
http://www.northwinds.net/bchris/1925.htm
http://www.webfamilytree.com/radio.htm
http://www.webcom.com/radioweb/educate/timeline.html
http://www.scripps.ohiou.edu/mediahistory/mhmjour2-2.htm
http://www.ac6v.com/history.htm

That is just a few of the hundreds of hits I got on Google on the subject. You should notice that they are all compiled from various and diverse references, and -none- of them mention anything similar to your claim that hams caused a "terrific source of trouble" for early broadcasters.

Like I said before, you need to check your "facts".

Wrong. You should know already that any antenna with a high radiation resistance is an efficient radiator. And it just so happens that a dipole has it's highest radiation resistance when it is resonant. SWR is not even a factor in this topic.

I agree to a point. Care to quantify that statement?

Wrong again. It is DIRECTLY proportional, all other factors being equal (IOW, you aren't heating the wires with zillions of watts).

>The sooner you get THAT out of YOUR head, you might actually stop >spreading bullshit false information.

You need to spend a little time at the library. Find a nice book on electromagnetics, then search through the index for the terms 'radiation intensity' and 'effective aperature'. I think you will find them on pages very close to each other, if not on the same page. And you will notice that the mathematical definitions of both terms are almost identical -- in fact, I have one book that provides a formula to convert between the two. Why? Because they are DIRECTLY RELATED, and that's why antennas are RECIPROCAL. Or maybe you think that someone came up with the concept out of thin air....

Government Announces New Powers to Combat Pirate Broadcasters
New powers of arrest were introduced on the 18th of September in an attempt to combat pirate radio stations. The police, working with Radiocommunications Agency investigators, will now be able to arrest a pirate broadcaster or anybody suspected of supporting or facilitating illegal broadcasting. Previously police could only detain someone if they suspected them of giving a false name and address or another criminal act, such as a breach of the peace or assault. The new powers of arrest will also extend to acts of deliberate interference with radio communications and hoax calls, especially false distress calls. The Communications Minister Stephen Timms said: "These new powers will be an important weapon in the campaign against pirate broadcasters. By interfering with communications services which are vital for public safety, pirates can put lives at risk. They also cause interference with other licensed radio users and can be a social nuisance to those who live near pirate stations."

Pirates detained under these new powers could face an unlimited fine or up to two years in prison. For other transmitting offences such as unlicensed use of business, marine, or amateur radio the maximum penalty is a £5000 fine and / or 6 months in prison plus forfeiture.

Name a single incident where a cber OR hammie was hit with ANY of the
Who said anything about a warning notice?

The only folks who need worry about such fines and incarcerations are those who fail to heed the warnings, so warnings, whether you acknowledge or not, play a huge part in such an outcome of an event as you describe.

I wasn't scolding you, Frank. You need stop taking simple usenet discussion to heart and everything as a personal affront.
Keeping with the above, in what manner does your reference to foreign law have to do with me that you felt it important enough to solicit my attention by directing it toward myself?

Back to obfuscation by invoking of-topics, Frankie? (sigh) I'll certainly indulge you. Once again, the golden rule, which most decent people adhere to, dictates you treat others as you wish to be treated. I asked you a question some time ago concerning your claim that RF pirates

Because this particular, rather benign but annoying worm, replicates itself and sends itself automatically to recipients in your addy book. I received it not once, but twice from you. Since reporting it, it hasn't happened at all. ISP's are now widely familiar with this little zinger and it would have been unfair to pull an account for something one had no control over. The reason your account wasn't pulled, I mistakenly assumed it would have automatically been reported by my spam service to your ISP, as most unauthorized intrusions are, so I ignored it. When I received it a second time from your addy, I KNEW it was sent manually and not reported. I reported it, which is when comcast became aware of the worm in your infected computer and nothing has came from your addy since. Since it was the FIRST report comcast received, they chalked it up to the virus,,,but like I said,,nothing since,,nada.

My mom died in 1993, cumslurper. I did have a great time with yours at a no-tell motel in Union Hill a little while back. Guess you are still pissed about not nailing her that night, ay?

Because this particular, rather benign but annoying worm, replicates
itself and sends itself automatically to recipients in your addy book.

Ok lets assume a hypothetical situation, If I did have the worm, which I never had, you said I purposly sent a virus to you and landshark.
Which now would be a lie #1 on your part, see below for lie #2

received it not once, but twice from you. Since reporting it, it hasn't happened at all. ISP's are now widely familiar with this little zinger
and it would have been unfair to pull an account for something one had no control over.

Lie #2, you said I sent it to you and landfag, purposely, right after I said wait till he see what he gets in his mail.
So that would have meant I knew what happened. If I sent it and knew about it why haven't they pulled my account?

The reason your account wasn't pulled, I mistakenly assumed it would have automatically been reported by my spam service to your ISP, as most unauthorized intrusions are, so I ignored it. When I received it a second time from your addy, I KNEW it was sent manually and not reported.

I reported it, which is when comcast became aware of the worm in your infected computer and nothing has came from your addy
since. Since it was the FIRST report comcast received, they chalked it up to the virus,,,but like I said,,nothing since,,nada.

Ok, let me get this straight are you saying Comcast told you "my computer" was infected? Yes or No Again, nothing was ever sent from my computer, your header reading ability suxs. Please answer truthfully
I wan't to make sure I got this straight capeesh.

Hey,,I LIKE when the A0s come through another's post. It's what helped bust a certain nocode for his unprovoked provocation of cbers. In his frustration in attempting to learn how to drop the "Ao's" from his poison, malicious posts, he became careless and part of his sig was left behind when he thought he was anonymous,,,so,,in the case of the AO's and the reconstituted scribbled mess,,I'd have to say the AO's are very dear to me, in certain cases.

itself and sends itself automatically to recipients in your addy book.

>Ok lets assume a hypothetical situation,

Off topic. Let's not.

I received it not once, but twice from you. Since reporting it, it hasn't happened at all. ISP's are now widely familiar with this little zinger and it would have been unfair to pull an account for something one had no control over.

Post it.

Exactly.

>If I sent it and knew about it why haven't they >pulled my account?

The reason your account wasn't pulled, I mistakenly assumed it would have automatically been reported by my spam service to your ISP, as most unauthorized intrusions are, so I ignored it. When I received it a second time from your addy, I KNEW it was sent manually and not reported.
I reported it, which is when comcast became aware of the worm in your infected computer and nothing has came from your addy since. Since it was the FIRST report comcast received, they chalked it up to the virus,,,but like I said,,nothing since,,nada.

>Ok, let me get this straight are you saying

It's not me that interprets the headeers, so this should be a non-issue for one who self-professes as much as yourself.

>Please answer truthfully

This is why you have serious pains of my presence in the ng. Integrity is something one can never recover after losing, and I'm quite good at pointing such things out..in fact,,,I'm damn good at it,,it's why such malice comes from the entertaining little group of followers that hold me as their deity. It is amazing what level some reduce themselves when one's ego is so heavily involved and bruised.

> I wan't to make sure I got this straight >capeesh.

Well then, you need read what is there and not what you want to be there. Cessation of deliberate misattributions to others would be a step in the right direction, as only degenerates need attempt such sorrow.

It is, has been and always will be: PEEPEEHOLIC, the Cleveland gutless sissy boy who talked wolf ticket with N8 and then whinily chickened out when told to bring it on.

He is a little pink muffin boy who quakes at the thought of cashing the alligator check his puppy dog ass tried to write. A coward, a sicko, a punk, and a lying low life hunk of maggoty fecal matter.

AKC's it is PEEPEEHOLIC!

A PUBLIC SERVICE MESSAGE FROM THE COMMITTEE FOR BETTER ANTI-KEYCLOWNISM. ALSO BY THE CLEVELAND INTITUTE FOR PINK MUFFIN PUNKBOYS.

There you go dwelling on men's asses again. If you love n8 so much, why not go to him. Just put some lipstick on and do it. Ask gayshark

I'm a freeband fan, but I scan everywhere. Frankly, much of it bores me in the same manner DX bores the repeater crowd, and ten meter is dead for DX compared to 11 unless a contest is going on, and even then, you

Yea, so I heard. Family members in the northeast corridor told me that the temperature was low 40's the other morning....that snow may arrive just in time for deer season...the single day of the year I envy you northerners. Nothing like being in deep woods, fresh snowfall, temp around 30 degrees, up in the tree stand by 4:30 so there is plenty of time to drink your hot chocolate or coffee or what have you....and wait for dawn!

Thanks for the invite. If I flew, I'd grab one of the 79 dollar Jet Blue fares to Cleveland or Allentown and rent a car, but I'm a driver, since they won't let me board wearing a parachute.

And in the beginning days of broadcasting, all stations could be found at one spot on the dial - 360 meters (833.3 kHz.) except for stations broadcasting weather and crop reports which were on 485 meters (618.6 kHz). In 1922 the Depart of Commerce made 400 meters (750 kHz) available for class "B" stations (500-1000 watts). Most of the interference was from the broadcast station themselves, not the amateurs. It wasn't until 1923 that the DOC began allocating stations to different frequencies.

Why is it called childrens band? This is a easy question.

There are types (insecure amateurs mainly) that are intimidated and made to feel inferior by CBer's, who they subconsciously feel are superior to them. Therefore, they re-direct their inferior feelings to a self-dilusional dislike for the person/people who they actually admire and want to emulate.

Thus the name calling (childrens band) and trolling of the group (your post)

Some may not, but my first transmitter was a Johnson Ranger I, which had 11 meters on it :). Obviously, I couldn't use that band in the early/mid 60s since 11 meters was changed from amateur radio to cb in the 50s. That is getting to be quite a while ago. It used to be the "junk" band, used for induction heating, medical, and just about everything else back then. Why people still argue over this or come into rec.radio.cb to cause flames never ceases to amaze me. They must really have some problems (remind me to buy stock in Rolaids and some of the psychotic drugs) :)

I'm a ham, and I agree with everything Twistedhed just wrote here. The original outbanders on and around 11 meters were indeed amateur radio ops who were either: 1) still ticked that 11 meters was taken away, even though it was even less populated at that time than, say, 29 MHz and environs is today; or 2)

>Where do people come up with this crap? I

If you were radio active when hammies lost it, you would most definitely remember.

>Most hams today don't even realize that 11

I don't know about "most", but I agree that many today probably don't realize it. Hell, we have hammies right here in our midst that think NALs are issued by the FCC solely from official observers witnessing infractions. It's amazing the disinformation that is out there and deliberately attempted,,the motive behind such actions is the curious part.

Nope. Used to all the time, though. Been out of the country a few times, flew all around the country many times until a return trip from Vegas one year in the not-so-distant-past. FWIW, it was before 9/11, so that had nothing to do with it. Lightning hit the plane and I don't know if it was the lightning or turbulence, but the place dropped several hundred feet. We lost most of the interior lights, they flickered on and off, oxygen masks came down, and the landing gear only partly descended.
The pilot told us to prepare to for a crash landing and we did a semi-belly slide on the runway. It made the papers and TV, and it wasn't fear that kept me from flying again,,but the promise I made,,,,,you know the one,,,,"Dear God,,please get me out of this and I'll try to be a better person and never fly again." That was good enough for me.

Commercial AM transmitters have changed a heck of a lot since I was chief engineer of WWHG AM-FM. I am not familiar with what they use now other than most of them are using switch mode amplifiers (which can run 90% efficiency). Even though they are either on (saturation) or off (open), there are means available to effectively "modulate" them. I sure wish I had saved that link two years ago which described a switch mode amplifier. A kit was available from a university in California for ham operators. It was not, however, linear and had means to control the leading and trailing edges of the signal when turned on or off. It was only good for cw or fm, but ran around 92% efficiency. Due to this, there is a lot less heat generated than what used to be generated. (the amps in the commercial stations are linear)

As to power, 50,000 watts means a 50,000 watt rms carrier. At 100% modulation, if you consider that under high level modulation, one has to supply an audio signal that will exactly reach cutoff, that audio signal will have to be equal (and exactly cancel the B+ to the final at the negative peak of audio) in voltage to the power supply. This means that the plate voltage is effectively running (under modulation) between zero and twice power supply voltage. This implies that the peak envelope power will be reached at the peak positive swing of audio modulation, at which time plate voltage will be twice normal. Since power equals voltage squared divided by resistance (and the resistance hasn't changed), the power at twice voltage will be four times normal (unmodulated carrier). Thus, 50,000 watt rms carrier will be modulated to a 200,000 watt peak envelope power. Radio stations will not reach 100% modulation; there are various limiters in the lines to keep it a few percent below 100% max for obvious reasons. I've never worked on one of those blow torches, but I've managed to get a 5,000 watt rf burn. Not recommended at all. Takes a long time to heal and burning flesh does not smell nice at all :) BTW, it tore a nice hunk of skin out of my finger and cauterized it instantly. No bleeding. Man, that hurt like heck, stunk like heck, and was most embarrassing!

Look mopedophile, we know you are upset but hey you can't expect N8 to pay attention to you every time you post, he is a busy man with an adult life. now maybe if you did something special like wrote a nice story about how you think about him when you are cutting lawns or shoveling snow or you could even draw something on a paper plate with crayon and post it here to share with us that would get his attention.

The biggest transmitter I ever saw, was lualualei.
21.4kHz or 23.4, I forget.., with a "tube" that had an airlock door, so the cathode could be repainted.
I saw it have a short one afternoon, the power feedlines to the building sagged visibly.

It's nearly half a megawatt..

So much space? Unlike some on this group, I don't post every day.
I remember you arguing a night away once... posting more in a few hours than many do in a week or even a month.

Maybe the fact that their lies and hypocrisy have been shown up upsets you too.

Something that your Mom or Dad gave you for misbehaving.
Often it would involve grabbing one of your wrists and raising it, to stop you covering your ass. They always seem to forget about your other arm... which automatically goes to cover your ass as soon as one arm is raised.

Ummm, Jim; most broadcasting stations today modulate between 110 and 125% on peaks, and it appears to be "legal". Or is that just to keep the "average" modulation at about 100%? Certainly increases adjacent channel interference and splatter!

Yup and when you do a traceroute on the AOL proxy account he has, it comes up in the same area, with in 10 miles of Allentown.

Asshole I am no where near Allentown LOL that is the funniest part of all your lies, how do you trace it to somewhere I am close to 100 miles from Hahahahahah You are a complete transexual buffon....

No you guess again asslicker you and twisty went to same header reading class, it is from pcp01587827pcs.anaprd01.md.comcast.net

Shame you have no idea how cable service works, ask gw to school you.

That what you get when you are using Comcast moped , I recieve the same thing from zone alarm

ZoneAlarm Pro has blocked an inbound ping from the IP address
68.48.11.208

No breach in your security has occurred. Your computer is safe.
Inside the firewall alert

Alert property Alert property value Technical explanation Source IP Address 68.48.11.208 The IP address of the

I get the same thing from zone alarm. Welcome to Comcast Moped.....

68.48.11.208

No breach in your security has occurred. Your computer is safe.
Details

There are a few possible reasons why another computer might ping yours:

a.. Your Internet Service Provider may be pinging your machine. This might be because your ISP wants to verify your presence online in order to provide basic connectivity and other services.
b.. If you are playing a computer game, the game host and possibly other players need to be able to see who else is currently online and playing.
c.. If you are using file-sharing software, other users may be checking for files that you are sharing.

Hello,

I am looking for a way to modifie my SOMMERKAMP TS790DX, The transceiver is working on the to the highest frequency of 28.315.

Can anyone help to modifi this set to the complete 10 Mtr band ??

Please let me now.

Greetings from a rainy Country

Of course your not george never were but that wouldnt stop those assclown from making up some reason for you being george. hmmm look at these 2 posts both of whom he has claimed is me, I hope he does one of his famous IP searches. He will see they both come back to ohio, hmm you don't think it is doug ?
Nah it is george george george, just because these assclowns say so. I extracted the ip for you Gayshark have at it

Then you haven't been listening. I haven't been a ham for 40 years, although I've been in the hobby that long, and I've heard 'em whining about it.

Again, you display your ignorance. Every ham I've ever talked to knows 11m was a ham band, but most are honest enough to admit that they lost it because they didn't use it. Same with 220-222 MHz.

As expected, another intelligent response from a known repeater jammer and pederast, DouGay Adairierre. Haven't you figured out yet that when you stoop to such lows you lose any respect or credibility you might think you have?

It may look that way but consider this. 95% of the disrupters in this group are composed of REGECTED amateur radio operators.

They have realized that no one on the amateur radio newsgroups, or amateur radio bands, will give them the time of day. They can't bring themselves to deal with this reality and CB is their scapegoat.
They hide their problem by creating a diversionary problem with a CB newsgroup, or CB radio in general. When in reality the problems real source is their OWN inability to socialize in a civilized and productive manner.

this ng has been attracting flames for years. agreed there use to be some good tech discussions but people like b. eitner, a powers, sean et al saw what this was and found their points of views only attracted frequency cops. the freq cops may disagree but they have, in their misguided attempts, done more to stifle "Citizens Band' radio proliferation by saying what should not be done instead of how can we help. hey george, dougie and your cadre what have you brought to the table beside homo related posts??????????????

We've now added all our crystal charts for free download/printing (PDF) on our site. These 36 charts cover about 95% of all American mobile & base CB models, and show exactly which crystal(s) affects which mode or channel. Very useful for troubleshooting "dead channels" symptom, or for modification to 10M or other freqs.

Check 'em out at: www.cbcintl.com/xtals/xtals.htm

We specialize in CB books, plans, kits, and high-performance CB

No troll here tom, just an observation at all of the childish gutter mouthing that goes back and forth. The only difference between some of the people in this newsgroup and a elementary school playground are some of the words used. The attitude is identical.

"Mine is bigger than yours"
"No it's not!"
"Yes it is..."
"You're stupid"
"So are you."
....
The only difference is the words. (more in the message)

Nothing but a red herring that has nothing to do with my original post, to which your response fits perfectly.
Dislike? Nope, wrong again and another red herring. I don't dislike anyone, even "Twistyboy" whom I would have no problem taking to lunch. If you've paid attention you've seen that he and I have had words before but that doesn't mean that I dislike him.

Wanna-be? By the looks of your posts I've been a CBer since before you were born. Just because I hold an Amateur Radio license doesn't make me give up being a CBer. Apparently you don't believe that CBers and hams can work together. Well they do quite often. They are invaluable simply by their numbers and are extremely helpful in emergencies. The next time your are has a disaster of some kind volunteer at your local sheriff's office or county emergency center, maybe you'll learn something.

That's just a load of hogwash. Eitner, Toll, and the rest of the voodoo-techies have done nothing but set the state of radio technology back nearly a century, redeveloped it using very little education, and created a whole lot of RF mythology to explain what their lack of education can't. What "RF cops" have done is to let people know that watts are not nearly as important as mode, antenna efficiency, receive noise, etc; that a Class C amp isn't linear, but makes a good splatter-box; that the length of your coax is important only if you have a grounding problem; that "Bird watts" is a term without a definition; that 'swang' and overmodulation cause harmonics, wasting RF power by sending it out on the wrong frequency; that overmodulation also distorts audio by making it louder but less intelligible; that distortion from dirty amps can cause RFI in all kinds of stuff, including cordless phones, home stereos, hospital equipment, emergency communications, and even automotive electronic systems.... do I need to continue?

Well, I have probably talked to a lot more hams both on and off the air than you have or ever will, and I have never heard one complain about losing 11 meters. What do you know about it anyway, you can't even find the 10 meter band.

So both hams you talked to just happened to know that, well isn't that amazing. Now run along dickieboy and see if you can find someone to help you find the 10 meter band.

So you violate the law without worry because you think that you won't get busted before you get a warning notice? Don't you think that most of the freeloaders who got busted haven't, at one time or another, held the same attitude? Yet they continued to push their luck until they eventually got popped. Certainly they didn't continue because they -wanted- to pay a huge fine, did they? Flippo didn't -want- to go to prison, did he? Of course not! They simply adopted a new attitude, thinking that since they got away with it for so long, and because there are so many freeloaders still operating, they just have to wait until the storm blows over and it's back to freeloading as usual. That's going to be the very same at attitude -you- will have after you get -your- warning notice, and it will also be the reason -you- will get busted -- that and your ego.

Regardless, I remember that there have been cases where people have been busted without a warning notice. I'll post the specifics when I find them.

Or on an Amateur newsgroup, but in higher quantities.
The crap on this group appears to be the overspill from the Amateur groups, where some Amateurs feel that, rather than enjoy their hobby, they must try to destroy other people's pleasure.

Considering that one of the main culprits in an "Amateur", who is known for repeatedly jamming repeaters... you really should think before you point the finger and name call.

As for as the original post goes, the high fine and imprisonment have always been there for "pirate" and use of Amateur bands without a licence. This is fine on paper, but the reality is rather different.

At the height of CB here, when there were hundreds of thousands of licensed CBers (official licence figures), there were at least as many unlicensed. Add to this, the large number of illegal radios, illegal antennas (most base antennas were illegal here back in the 80s). Most CBers were breaking the law one way or another, if only because of the crazy antenna and "no frivelous transmissions" rules.

Out of the hundreds of thousands of people using CB illegally the usual yearly "bust" figure has always been around 30 people per year. And, so far, I have never heard of one getting the "pirate" penalty... the usual is a small fine and loss of the equipment.

The reason may be the same as for a law change. At one time, there were only three possible offences:
Importing.
To prove this, one had to be caught entering the country with illegal equipment.
Connecting.
Once again, one had to be caught in the act, or one could say that someone else connected it.
Using.
This was extremely difficult to prove in a court, as tapes were useless in court. Many voices could sound alike, and it is impossible to prove beyond a reasonable doubt who the voices belong to and whether the people were using any radio, let alone a particular illegal radio or frequency.

So, they added posession of illegal transmitting equipment (such as American CBs)... but that is only a small fine and destruction of the equipment.

Any radios marketed as "Amateur", and HF amplifiers are NOT illegal equipment here... they have a possible legal use.
Owning radio equipment (including Amateur) or receiving transmissions on such equipment does not need a licence here, only transmitting on one does.

On paper, the high fines and improsonment may act to deter some people, but the reality is that the RIS have to accept the lesser offences that they know they can prove in a court. They are under funded, so will not waste money on cases they may lose - and boasting "100% conviction rate" may just scare some people into behaving themselves.

Regards,

Peter.

Oh for Pete's sake, Pete, there are trolls in every corner of Usenet, radio related or not. They can't all be the product of "overspill from the Amateur groups", can they? If you want to blame hams for something, at least blame them for something they did, not for something that you simply don't like. And just to remind you, THIS NEWSGROUP is "overspill from the Amateur groups" -- it was created to kick the CBers out of the hammie groups.

Geez, is your brain busted, Brainbuster? Of course it means something outside of amateur radio. It means that his interest in radio extends beyond the CB. It also means that he is a unique individual and willing to put his name to his statements, not an anonymous troll that hides behind a keyboard. I might get a callsign myself for just those reasons!

That's just a load of hogwash. Eitner, Toll, and the rest of the voodoo-techies have done nothing but set the state of radio technology back nearly a century, redeveloped it using very little education, and created a whole lot of RF mythology to explain what their lack of education can't. What "RF cops" have done is to let people know that watts are not nearly as important as mode, antenna efficiency, receive noise, etc; that a Class C amp isn't linear,

That's a load of hogwash. What "RF cops" have done, is call people names, lie, and make all sorts of things up about the FCC making busts to the official observer program making busts and having NAL's issued by the FCC for their efforts. And get this,,those involved with such programs and "emergency communications" are some of the largest lying lids on this group when it comes to cb, only they need shown their lies, as they don't all admit to their repeated lying as you were forced to admit.
Skip was absolutely outstanding this past weekend. Whassamatter, Frank? Ignoring you for too many weeks while you jumped up and down waving your hands and calling me by name finally getting to you? See what I have taught you? Only a year ago you were singing a tune about the sky falling, now you are catching on that your claims of cbers raising cane and being responsible for your personal undoings by that,,,,,"claims" by yourself that were of no truth. I-m-p-o-t-e-n-c-e.

Of course warnings play a huge part in such predicaments, yet here you are desperately attempting to misattribute something I did not say to myself. These warnings must come from the FCC. The Observer program has NO authority over ANYONE or ANYTHING and can do nothing any other public citizen can't do.

You are becoming redundant again. What I do and don't, is none of your concern except that it illustrates your illogic. YOU made the claim illegal cb behavior affects you daily in your work. Watching you squawk, it's clear it was but another lie you were forced to admit.

"Popped" is not something you have to offer, nor the observers. It is something ONLY law enforcement can do,,,,perhaps this is highly upsetting to you, as you have many times fostered and agreed with vigilante-type justice for YOUR beliefs, whether they affected others or not.

Flippo was warned three times before monetary and criminal action was undertaken. Your attempts at lumping cbers in with a single scofflaw means nothing. One may apply the same standards to hammie radio.

My ego? LOL,,I'm not the one that is hellbent on impressing strangers by claiming college and being an engineer. I'm not the one claiming I know more than everyone else on this group about eveything,,,,YOU are, Frankie.
I'm not the one whose ego is responsible for spouting off the "F" word and calling names in a drunken rage of furor to whoever dares correct your laughable and mistaken incoherent lies and ramblings,,,you are, Frankie.

One thing at a time. Try the golden rule and common courtesy. If you make a claim that is questioned, you should try answering it or suffer the consequences: deal with your rep as a lying lid. You still haven't explained why you claimed illegal cbers affect your daily work, so you have no right to pose another question until you answer your own. You certainly can not expect any unbiased observer to take any of your claims with any truth whatesoever after being forced to admit you reduce yourself to lies in this ng, and quite frequently, at that.

Hey Brain, I'm not inherently familiar with the UK rules pertaining to cb, but I know y'all need a license for a telly, so it wouldn't surprise me if the laws were different. I'm intimately familiar with the FCC inner workings as per cb scofflaws,,,more so than some self-professed hammies that claim to have friends that are FCC lawyers and feel that qualifies them to espouse bullshit about what the US communication laws actually allow and disallow.

It hasn't gone to hell,,in fact, just the opposite,,,they are crying

Frank Gilliland (Sparky@cet.com) seethed with: Geez, is your brain busted, Brainbuster? Of course it means something outside of amateur radio. It means that his interest in radio extends beyond the CB. It also means that he is a unique individual and willing to put his name to his statements, not an anonymous troll that hides behind a keyboard. I might get a callsign myself for just those reasons!

Nope, not a keyclown. You're answer does nothing but reinforce my position that people (not all) on this newsgroup are nothing but little children with big expensive toys. You have no intellectual argument (that means you can't answer with clear thought) so you insult and divert the argument away from, and reinforce, the original point which is that this group in the epitome (that means the best example) of children's band. Yep, troll was set to maximum, outriggers at depth (11-meters) and you took the bait.

Ok, 4th grade reading level. (probaby the best three years of your life)

CBers are extreme helpful when something bad happens like when big scarry storms come. That's because there are so many of them. Maybe you should take a field trip to your local police station and ask if you can help.
Maybe you will learn something about how grown-ups work and help others when bad things happen.

There, is that simple enough for you?

All insults aside, thanks! My area also has a volunteer fire department. The general population doesn't understand what it's like to wake up in the middle of the night to an ear-popping siren, jump into the truck and wonder what you're going to find when you get there. Last month we answered a call and when we got there the house was fully involved. Someone driving by saw the fire and called 911 on his cell phone. The mother was outside screaming that her husband had run back inside to save the four month old baby. A vaporizer had overheated and started the fire. The baby only suffered from smoke inhalation and first degree burns but the father had second and third degree burns to his back and arms.

Cjen dobre ;-)

There are better propagation on that band, but i must say i can not hear anyone down on that band, so, it MAY be correct what you are saying...

I reach mid-west of USA on 20watts vertical, shame that 26Mhz not is used so much, there my power is 50+ watts, due to better SWR.

well, there are several....

if you want to remain strictly class D, you can get one of 3 makes that are still worth the money:
1. uniden,
2. dynascan (cobra)
3. midland (if they still make any).

or you can probably got the ham radio route (however, you do this at your own risk!).

or, you could get your ticket and really go ham radio (and leave the 11 meter band behind) <sorry for the dig guys, but I listened in on 11 last night and it was the same old shit all over again>.

thats pretty much it.

No I park wherever there's a spot and don't worry about it. Getting to the call is more important than a good parking spot.

Other peoples' pleasure at breaking the law? Yes there are bad elements in both hobbies and rec.radio.amateur.policy is an embarrasement. The difference is that you and those like you defend the rec.radio.cb children.

If, as you say, he repeatedly jams repeaters and you know who he is then why does he still have his license? Or do you just accuse him of this with no base of evidence? One call to the ARRL will put monitoring at his "doorstep." He will be caught in a very short period of time if he "repeatedly" jams anyone. But then it's easier to point fingers and make accusations than to actually do anything about it because to do anything about it requires hard evidence.

Yes it was a very easy question to which you totally blew the answer.

Intimidated? You must think that your superiority complex is bigger than everyone else's. Irritated, not intimidated, by intrusions into the licensed portions of 10-meters. Trouble is that it's illegal for us to interfere with the illegal intruders or to even tell them go leave.

But it's so much fun to tweak them, it's so easy and they are so predictable. You tell them that they are childish and the "refute" it with childish obscenities. I wouldn't call them gayboys because I don't know them. But from what they write I can call them childish or at least depraved.

in Toledo, Ohio. He can never post anything but lame sexual crap because that's all he's interested in. Too bad this known repeater

Hey numbskull; I know where the 10meter hamband is. Do you? Highly doubtful. Do you still think the 9/11 hijackers were "heroes"? TROLL!

Not so. The unlicensed stations have no rights on the ham band, if you happen to call cq or start a contact with another ham station on their frequency it is just too bad for them. You have done nothing illegal.

It doesn't.

Quite a few years ago....

> is this what you impress upon your students if >indeed you are an instructor/teacher/mentor?

My students all knew my name, and I knew all of their names. And there were a few things I constantly reinforced:

1. Think for yourself. In your post you stated the opinion that techs like Toll and Eitner left because of pressure from the "frequency cops". Is that -your-opinion, or is it someone else's opinion with which you agree?

2. Think logically. You have been reading the newsgroup for a while, and by now you should have seen that I have been involved in plenty of legal discussions.
Does that make me a "frequency cop"? Well, you should have also noticed that I have taken part in many technical discussions, some of which dealt with the quality of amps -- IOW, I have provided info on how CBers can tell a good amp from a bad amp. If I was a "frequency cop", why would I do that?

3. Verify the facts. The facts are that CBers in this newgroup talk about CB, and the rest are trolls. They are not keyclowns, they are not AKC, they are not freebanders or frequency cops. They are trolls. As for the voodoo-techs, they left not because of opposition to their legal position, but because they were publically spanked for spewing their ridiculous techno-babble.

4. Never assume. When you agree with someone's opinion without verifying the facts and logic supporting that opinion, you are assuming that someone else has already done so. Many times (if not most of the time) that is not the case. And it's NEVER the case with Twistedhed's opinions.

5. Safety.

True story. It's illegal to interfere with -authorized- transmissions. There is no law against jamming -unauthorized- stations.

Once again you have distorted the facts. I said that illegal operators, NOT CBers, affect me in my work. They do. And in response to your deranged and in detail. Yet after crawling on my belly to meet you on your level, you

It's interesting how you make a differentiation between "monetary" action and "criminal" action. Strange, but I don't recall ever having read about any such duality in the CFR or the USC. Perhaps you can cite a legal reference to support your statement... oh hell, what am I saying? You? Support your statements with facts? LOL... I'm sure he was. He hasn't posted much lately, so when you see him again why don't you ask him why sequenced relays are "bad news". Or maybe you could get him to describe his "larger picture" explanation in a little more technical detail. After all, he wasn't driven off the group because of his technical Yepp, it seems so.

I could ofcourse shorten my antenna 5" or so, but i let it be for now.
It works fine from 25.6 to 26.4 Mhz.

He had your mom blow a dog on stage at the FCC summer employee party.
They liked it so much they let him slide. Especially the part where she sucked off anyones pet that was brought to the party.

And now you followed suit with the topic of warnings. You can't ignore the faction, as you can not have one without the other.

Whassamatter, Frank? Ignoring you for too many weeks while you jumped up and down waving your hands and calling me by name finally getting to you? See what I have taught you? Only a year ago you were singing a tune about the sky falling, now you are catching on that your claims of cbers raising cane and being responsible for your personal undoings by affecting you daily in your work were nothing more than

An honest error. Ok,,"illegal operators". Nevertheless, you never answered the question of how such behavior, despite your claim otherwise, affects your "daily work".. Redundant parroting and vehemently clamoring that you have done so doesn't cut it. Post your answer, not a whining diatribe as how you already did.

>And in response to your deranged

You're not going to get upset with snipping your obfuscation attempts by off-topic remarks, are you Frank? After all, "they", whoever you refer to by using the term, have no bearing on your misery. The man in the mirror is responsible for your misery. Stop looking to others for blame and try to remain on topic..

Of course warnings play a huge part in such predicaments, yet here you are desperately attempting to misattribute something I did not say to myself. These warnings must come from the FCC. The Observer program has NO authority over ANYONE or ANYTHING and can do nothing any other public citizen can't do.

"Popped" is not something you have to offer, nor the observers. It is something ONLY law enforcement can do,, Muenzler did. Did you miss his post? If you weren't reduced and forced to purchasing a dedicated service for access to the group, you may actually catch all the posts. He claimed the observers actually catch the radio illegals and the FCC sends NAL's.

It's bullshit. Your issue is with he. Since your comprehension deficit is preventing you from recalling who said what, I used this opportunity to take it upon myself and inform you just what he said. In fact, you inserted yourself into this thread, just about the time I was burying Muenzler with his lie concerning such, and are now attempting to make MEMEMEMEMMEMME the subject of your attention and fondness again.

Flippo was warned three times before monetary and criminal action was

The truth always upset you, Frankie. The minute you become personal and off topic, it will be pointed out that your ego is again wounded and you have no other way of expressing yourself. It's a communication deficit you suffer from that is responsible for such off topic ramblings and the Post what you said you would, Of course, you again it off more than you off-the-cuff remarks and claims that will go unsubstantiated along with so many others by the loser lids you surround yourself with, such as Dougie and Geogre.

You still haven't explained why you claimed illegal cbers affect your daily work, so you have no right to pose another question until you answer your own.

No, Frankie,,that was I that provided proof of all my claims, not you.
You provide nothing but anger and malice and name calling and personal problems. Your deficits and mild retardations, coupled with your wounded claims with any truth whatesoever after being forced to admit you reduce yourself to lies in this ng, and quite frequently, at that.

The Tampa Bay Hamfest Issues a Challenge
In Defense of Amateur Radio
By: Dan Johnson - W4BNC
October 6, 2003
This December 6th and 7th, the twenty-eighth annual Tampa Bay Hamfest will continue the celebration of everything good that is Ham Radio. But our celebration will be tempered by a new and ominous threat to our frequencies and our operating privileges. A proposal to allow Broadband over Power Lines (BPL) is currently pending before the Federal Communications Commission. BPL has the potential to cause devastating interference to the entire radio spectrum between 2 MHz and 80 MHz.
The Florida Gulf Coast Amateur Radio Council (FGCARC), sponsors of the 28th Annual Tampa Bay Hamfest, has overwhelmingly voted to donate $1.00 of each admission ticket sold at this year's hamfest to the ARRL - BPL Legal Defense Fund. FGCARC is proud to issue the Tampa Bay Hamfest Challenge to every other major Hamfest nationwide. We challenge you to follow our lead by contributing ONE DOLLAR per ticket to the ARRL Amateur Radio Defense Fund.
"I am very pleased that our group has chosen the high road to defend our frequency privileges", says Dan Johnson, W4BNC, this year's council president and hamfest chairman. Our success has been derived from the dedication of a loyal core group of members from 28 ham clubs within the West Central Florida Section that have come together with one common goal; that is to promote a successful hamfest. At a time when many events are on a decline we have been fortunate to experience growth over the last 3 years.
The Florida Gulf Coast Amateur Radio Council, Inc. recognizes the substantial threat BPL is to the over eight hundred sixty thousand Amateur Radio licensees nationwide. For this reason, the 2003 TampaBay Hamfest will be conducted "In Defense of Amateur Radio". ARRL Labs Technical Manager Ed Hare, W1RFI will present information on BPL. ARRL Southeastern Division Director Frank Butler, W4RH will discuss the ARRL's actions, to date, to stop this threat. Other forums will focus on positive steps Hams can take to advance the Amateur Radio art. And, our vendors will bring the latest Ham Radio technology to their booths.

Come help us "In Defense of Amateur Radio" at the twenty-eight annual TampaBay Hamfest, December 6th and 7th at the Manatee Co. Civic Center, Palmetto, FL. For more information, visit our website, http://www.fgcarc.org.

Nope, not according to the FCC. If they are there, illegal or not, you may not interfere with them to "run them off." That's malicious interference.
Part 97.29(d) does not distinguish between legal and illegal stations, it says "any". It's likely that the FCC would not enforce it since they are there illegally but I would not risk my ticket for it. You may also not communicate with them in any way to tell them to leave.

From where in Part 97 do you get your information?

97.29(d) No amateur operator shall willfully or maliciously interfere with or cause interference communication or signal.
Nothing in there distinguishing between legal and illegal.

Yeah, have another good hamfest or two before Ham Radio is sent into the dustbin of history.....

The Tampa Bay Hamfest Issues a Challenge In Defense of Amateur Radio
By: Dan Johnson - W4BNC
October 6, 2003
This December 6th and 7th, the twenty-eighth annual Tampa Bay Hamfest will continue the celebration of everything good that is Ham Radio. But our celebration will be tempered by a new and ominous threat to our frequencies and our operating privileges. A proposal to allow Broadband over Power Lines (BPL) is currently pending before the Federal Communications Commission.

>I guess these fools do not know that the FCC >has already given the green light to BPL...

The only "fool" is one that can't see the forest for the trees. The gist of the article, is matters that are of inherent concern to hammie radio, are widely agreed upon, unlike the few who hammies in rec.radio.cb who like to lay their life's problems at the feet of cbers who may dx.

BPL has the potential to cause devastating interference to the entire radio spectrum between 2 MHz and 80 MHz. The Florida Gulf Coast Amateur Radio Council (FGCARC), sponsors of the 28th Annual Tampa Bay Hamfest, has overwhelmingly voted to donate $1.00 of each admission ticket sold at this year's hamfest to the ARRL - BPL Legal Defense Fund.

Perhaps when you rid yourself of the "Sybil" complex from which you suffer, you may comprehend. Until then, feel free to continue to pull numbers from your rectal orifice and set them forward as if they had some type significance or relevance.

FGCARC is proud to issue the Tampa Bay Hamfest Challenge to every other major Hamfest nationwide. We challenge you to follow our lead by contributing ONE DOLLAR per ticket to the ARRL Amateur Radio Defense Fund.
"I am very pleased that our group has chosen the high road to defend our frequency privileges", says Dan Johnson, W4BNC, this year's council president and hamfest chairman. Our success has been derived from the dedication of a loyal core group of members from 28 ham clubs within the West Central Florida Section that have come together with one common goal; that is to promote a successful hamfest.

When the FCC states communication or signal, the assumption is that communication or signal is legal, not illegal. You cannot interfer with an illegal signal. If you don't believe me, call the FCC.

Not that I favor any BPL technology but it will be interesting to see how the ever present letter of the law frequency police that troll this group react to new rules concerning amateur radio and BPL. I wonder if they will adhere to the letter of the law when it concerns them?

What it will do is shut down both ham radio and cb.
Power lines (unlike CATV) are usually unshielded and BPL will cover the ham and cb bands with solid 10 dB over s9 white noise once it gets going. The FCC wants this BPL so bad because it will enable "Internet Ready" appliances like Microwave Ovens, and Refrigerators.
The FCC wants everyone to click a few keys on their cell phone and be able to tyrn on their microwave oven or crock pot while their still on the way home on the Interstate like George Jetson of the cartoon series of the same name. It will also generate huge revenue for the telephone and power line carriers who will no doubt be able to charge big bucks for this service like the cable TV providers do right now. Bottom line: It's all about MONEY. Always was.
Always will be. Case closed.

Yep, the BPL spells gloom and doom for air to air use. BIG money will always win the band spectrum, and all you'll be able to do is -attempt-to jam in incoming interference.

Does that make you a keyclown if you attempt to jam something that is stepping on your toes!?

It will be interesting as it will not be protected from legitimate users. I did not keep the URL, but tests were run in one area with BPL. Filters were in use to "reduce" interference to the amateur bands. A test was run connecting through BPL with a computer and a 20 meter dipole up some modest height (again, I don't recall exact figures). It seems 20 watts or so caused 70% packet loss and 50 watts rendered BPL 100% unusable. I'm not going to say what will or will not be; it seems, to me at least, that there was a lot of salesmanship and little technical thought in this whole process. We shall see.

Wrong. The FCC is not required to give a warning notice before issuing an NAL.
They do anyway as a matter of policy (because they don't want to fight the consititutionality issue in court).

You betcha! What you snipped was proof of your communication deficit! Just like all the other times when you had to eat crow, you ignored the post where I ended two years of you pleading for an explanation to my comment, and you ignored it again by snipping the link to that post. So once again you are eating a crow sandwich, but you have a double helping this time because not only did I provide your answer, but I showed you that the answer was in front of your face the whole time and you were too stupid to see it. Now do you really think that I'm just going to sit passive and let you snip your way out of it? Hell no, I'm going to hold you to YOUR standard of the "golden rule" -- I gave you the answer for which you have been begging for two years, now it's your turn. All that "golden rule" talk wasn't just another lie, was it? Then how about some answers, Twist? I suspect that you are too afraid to answer them because it would force you to admit that you are nothing but a lying troll. Ignore the questions and you'll be eating your words along with your crow!

Now, in the part of my reply that you snipped I asked if you need a list of those questions or if you are smart enough to find them yourself. Well?

Wrong. YOUR issue is with him, because you are dragging that issue into this discussion where you have yet to explain how the two are related. So if you want to whine to me about your disagreement with Muenzler, explain what observer programs and warning notices have to do with the large penalties for operating illegally.

...uh, Jim, did you ever look at the name? And that person left 2-1/2 years before my first post. Regardless, there are several people that have left because of the crap, people from BOTH sides of the legal issue. And like I said before, most of the crap in here comes from the trolls; that is, unless you consider rational discussions of legal issues to be part of the 'crap'.

It shouldn't. If you want to solve a problem you must address the source of the problem. In case you haven't noticed, Twisty is the focal point of most of the crap. He has been a major source of the problems here, including the forging, name-calling, threats, unrestrained profanity and general mayhem. Chances are that he is also one or more of the trolls causing all the trouble, and might even be the person posing as N8WWM under a deliberately poor disguise. Either way, ignoring him doesn't work -- been there, done that, got the crummy T-shirt and coffee mug.

There should be no doubt as to the reason for their absence. When their psuedo-technical theories were contradicted with authoritative references and simple logic, they left. One by one they were discredited, each according to their own particular incompetence. And it's no coincidence that just as soon as their RF-voodoo was exposed they disappeared. Most have tried to return at least once, but were unable to support their technical mumbo-jumbo with facts, and quickly departed once again. No, they didn't leave because of the 'crap' -- they left because they had publically humiliated themselves with their own ignorance.

508. Help, I have 12 volts on the chassis of the radio

A friend of mine was cleaning his mobile radio. When he went to plug the power back in, the middle pin (offset) was loose and pushed back into the radio, allowing him to put the connector in backwards. (hot to ground) This killed the radio. (he had no inline fuse at the time) I told him I would look inside of it for him. Once inside I found nothing burnt. After fixing the dummy pin, and connecting power with the correct polarity to a D.C. power supply on my bench, the radio still wont come on. When I started checking for voltage, I found that I had 12 volts on the chassis. It is on both sides of the on/off switch with the switch off. The 12 volts is everywhere. Does anyone have any ideas about what to check next? It is hard to use the meter when everywhere shows 12 volts.... Thanks, Bill

A friend of mine inadvertantly plugged in his power cord backwards, after cleaning his mobile. The middle (offset pin) was loose and pushed back in the radio allowing the plug to slide in reversed. He did not have an inline fuse connected at the time. Needless to say it killed the radio. I told him I'd look on the inside for him. I found nothing burnt up on the inside. After fixing the power pins, I correctly connected it to a D.C. power supply on my bench. The radio won't come on. When I started checking for voltage, I found that I had voltage everywhere. 12 volts is on the chassis, both sides of the on/off dial, everywhere.... Anyone have any advice on what to look for next? It's hard to troubleshoot with the voltage meter, when power shows up everywhere....Thanks

It's the reverse polarity diode. (hopefully)

Mope, I understand your feelings entirely, but stooping to his level is, IMHO, much below anyone in this NG. He's a moron, and nothing will change that. He has his own tunnel versioned view of why is so unhappy, and he thinks CB is it. His views could not be further from the truth. He is a simplistic little child who happens to inhabit a man's body. He has picked this newsgroup to try to inflame some sort of moral war that he can't win. He thinks he can win, and for whatever reasons, those of you whom chose to debate with him are fueling his fire. Ignore the putz and let him bash himself to death on the keyboard. He's not worth your time.

Not to chastise you, but to everyone reading this, NEVER, EVER run a radio without the proper fuse for just this reason!

This is interesting. When you measure voltage, to what are you measuring it against? IOW, where are you putting your probes?

Turn the radio off, hook the negative lead of your meter to the chassis, then measure the two pins of the power switch. What do you get?

Digital voltmeter set on D.C. Neg lead on power supply negative post. Positive lead checking everywhere mentioned above aproximately 1 volt give or take a tenth

I also reversed the leads and get the same readings with the negative sign on the meter. IOW hot lead to negative post on power supply, with negative probe checking gets the same results with negative numbers.

I'll agree with Jim. Frank you are not a dumb person, but sometimes I do believe you let your ego get in the way.
What Jim has said is good sound advice. You know as well as I that if George stopped harassing people, Doug stopped his foul, vulgar posts more cb talk would happen, legal and or illegal, at least it would be radio talk. I'm getting ready to install a larger alternator, radio, antenna mount (that's the hard part, don't want to cut or make any holes in the Bronco) so I can get a vehicle back on the air.

I think that was very well said Mopar, what do you think? Oh, by the way.....
..... Just the stroppe stickers and the 2

If you are implying that people, who hold ham licenses, should be somehow held to a higher moral standard than the "common man", then that would be faulty logic. A ham license is only a "permit" to use radio, it is not a "badge of morality".

I think Mopar was trying to say that it's getting close to winter again. Since you both might have the same type of weather, he thought it would be better conversation than hurling insults.

The negative power lead is fused somewhere between the point it connects to the power supply and the PCB ground (which, BTW, is -not- the same as chassis ground). It may even be a cracked or fused trace on the PCB itself. Start doing continuity checks from the negative power lead of the radio to points inside the radio that should be connected.

There is a special sticker that goes on either side that is for the Baja Stroppe only. You bet, it sat for 2 plus years, needed some new gaskets, a new carb, but runs real strong. It has a C4 Auto that was rebuilt 3 years ago, shift kit and all. Changed out the Radius strut arm bushing this morning, thank god someone was there that knows all the little tricks to it easy.

good progress.

What CB antenna are you going to put on it? (on topic now)

Sometimes the so called chassis is not connected to the Board ground, Note where the negative lead is going to.
and measure from there.

Talked with one of the tech's, we came up with an idea that should work ok.
On the pass. rear there is the tire rack,
we are going to manufacture a mount that will use the bolt pattern of the rack mounts, but still bring the antenna out of the way of the liftgate. It should give me a good grounding and leave the antenna out of the way of most things. I'm not sure of what antenna yet, 102, Skipshooter, Quad Wound which ever seems to work best I guess.

>Who said anything about a warning notice? _

I did. The fines are irrelevant unless the notice has arrived first.

>Wrong.

Right.

>The FCC is not required to give a >warning notice before issuing an NAL. They >do anyway as a matter of policy

LOL,,no shit, Frank. They ARE issued prior to an NAL to radio ops.

>(because they >don't want to fight the consititutionality issue in >court).

Because they would lose, much as you lost credibility self-respect, and integrity among your peers. Wait a second, you have no peers.

The only folks who need worry about such fines and incarcerations are those who fail to heed the warnings, so warnings, whether you acknowledge or not, play a huge part in such an outcome of an event as you describe.

And now you followed suit with the topic of warnings. You can't ignore the faction, as you can not have one without the other.

>You don't even remember what you wrote, do >you, Twist?

Try and remain on subject, Frank. The warnings play a huge part in the matter. You first took issues with my mentioning of fines, now you acknowledge exactly what I maintained. In fact, you;re not certain of what you want to take issue with, as long as you have something to bitch about..LOL.

Whassamatter, Frank? Ignoring you for too many weeks while you jumped up and down waving your hands and calling me by name finally getting to you? See what I have taught you? Only a year ago you were singing a tune about the sky falling, now you are catching on that your claims of cbers raising cane and being responsible for your personal undoings by affecting you daily in your work were nothing more than that,,,,,"claims" by yourself that were of no truth. I-m-p-o-t-e-n-c-e.

>Once again you have distorted the facts.

Not at all. That was you that distorted,..whoops, excuse me,,,you distorted nothing,,,you outright lied concerning such offtopics such as my language. Your ego must be feeling very low and turned out again for you to turn your personal attention toward myself on such a regular basis. You ought learn how to communicate effectively and stop lying and you wouldn feel so terrible about yourself all your miserable life..

> I said

>that illegal operators, NOT CBers, affect me in

An honest error. Ok,,"illegal operators".

>RED-LETTER DAY!!! Mark this one in the >history books! Twisty admits a mistake instead >there's hope for you yet, Twist!

I've always admitted my mistakes, Frank,,,and apologized to boot. But once again, your fancy of MEMEMEME is not the subject, merely one of your dilemmas and maladies that you have been unable to get a grip on.
You have been asked several times by others to demonstrate some self-control that you are unable to muster and that eludes you. You claim you are unable. You have issues, Frank,,,the man in the mirror is your nightmare.

Nevertheless, you never answered the question of how such behavior, despite your claim otherwise, affects your "daily work"..

>Wrong, and if you had read the rest of my post >before you frantically jumped to the keyboard >to counter my every word, you would have >seen the link I provided.

Redundant parroting and vehemently clamoring that you have done so doesn't cut it. Post your answer, not a whining diatribe as how you already did.

>I did. I included the link. Put up a fight to >overcome your communication deficit for a few >minutes and read it.

LOL.....the deficit is all yours, Frank, and repeated blaming of others of your ailments and blaming others for your misery is my entertainment and your cornfused ire
The deficit apears to be with you being unable to communicate your words effectively.

>And in response to your deranged

>interpretation of the "golden rule" I have even >explained to you how they do so,

>and in detail.

(snip)
You're not going to get upset with snipping your obfuscation attempts by off-topic remarks, are you Frank? After all, "they", whoever you refer to by using the term, have no bearing on your misery. The man in the mirror is responsible for your misery. Stop looking to others for blame and try to remain on topic..

>You betcha! What you snipped was proof of >your communication deficit! Just like all the >other times when you had to eat crow, you >ignored the post where I ended two years of >you pleading for an explanation to my >comment, and you ignored it again by >snipping the link to that post.

In the first place, I have certainly never eaten crow on this group,,,in the second, you have about the lowest validity of truth of anyone in the ng. I click on nothing. If you are unable to reply to your claim,,,so be it. That you feel a comment by yourself being questioned is pleading is but more of an example of what ails you. You initiated the snipping of posts, and once again, whine when the act is returned. I have suggested on more than one occasion, do not snip my replies to you and I will not return your initiated behavior that you complain so much about.

>once again you are eating a crow sandwich,

>but you have a double helping this time >because not only did I provide your answer,

It wasn't my answer Frank,,it was yours. That you misinterpret your own claims as another's inquiry of you is your problem, Frank, not mine, not anyone elses..

>but I showed you that the answer was in front >of your face the whole time and you were too >stupid to see it.

I see not only are you agitated to the point of insult, but are so disgusted with yourself for making yet another claim you are unable to substantiate, that you have no choice but to attempt at making your post topic of MEMMEMEMME instead of your claim...LOL...anything but that.

>Now do you really think that I'm just going to >sit passive and let you snip your way out of it? _

You have no choice. YOU made the claim first that you would give examples of radio ops being popped without receiving a warning. I call. You are unable. Exchange over. Checkmate.

The only "fool" is one that can't see the forest for the trees. The gist of the article, is matters that are of inherent concern to hammie radio, are widely agreed upon, unlike the few who hammies in rec.radio.cb who like to lay their life's problems at the feet of cbers who may dx.

Doubtfully. For the most part, there are but a handful of hammies on this group who post regularly worth their salt, and after you count them on one hand, you still have a finger or two left over. The rest have issues with themselves, not cb. They are unable to handle two issues at once. Cb AND hammie radio makes it too complicated for some,,,like walking and chewing gum.

I thought Jim said a pretty good explanation. I thought I gave him a good explanation, but alas he's still, like a couple others, very obsessed with this newsgroup. Mopar tried to just have a cordial post with him and Frank got snooty with him.
It's a shame really, he's not a dumb person, a little confused maybe,
but not dumb.

My point exactly. We can't interfere with those illegals and we cannot communicate with them to tell them to leave. So, we're stuck with them until such time as the FCC finds them.

Where do you the idea that the FCC distinguishes between "authorized" and "unauthorized" transmissions. The law only states that it is illegal to interfere with communications. It does not make any distinction. I agree that they have no right to be there but it is also against Part 97 to interfere with them.

You are correct, the illegal station doesn't have much standing but the rules says "any radio communication or signal." There is no distinction between legal and illegal. By the letter of the law (perhaps even the spirit of the law) it is absolutely illegal to interfere with them because they are both a communication and a signal, legal or not.

You missed the entire point, the FCC does not consider illegal signals to have any standing or rights on the band, so if you transmit over the top of them it is not considered illegal interference. Legal transmissions take precedent over illegal transmissions, so transmit and interfer with them all you want, it isn't illegal. Call the FCC and ask.

He is correct about the reverse polarity protection diode.
Follow the Positive (+) circuit board line in from the power connector on the back of the radio. You should come to a small diode. Make a note of which side of the diode has the silver band.
Unsolder the diode and head to the nearest electronics store or heaven forbid, Radio Shack.
It is a standard 1n4000 (low power units) or a 1n4001...very inexpensive.
Put it back in with the silver band on the same side as the one you pulled out.
Should be ready to go.
Try this site.

Actually, the illegal signals are causing illegal interference to the licensed stations. The fact that the licensed station happens to pick the very frequency they are on makes no difference, the illegal signal is the one causing illegal interference.

The fundamental purpose of the FCC is to regulate the use of the spectrum by imposing specific requirements. These requirements include use through grants of authorization, as well as protection for those with such authorization. Now if, as you suggest, it is illegal to interfere with an unauthorized transmission, then two things are happening -- the illegal station is being protected from the legal station, and the legal station is -not- being protected from the illegal station. That is in complete contradiction to the intent and purpose of every other part of the regulations (the 'color' of the law). Now while the specific regulation you cited makes no distinction between authorized and unauthorized transmissions, the 'color' of law -does- make such a distinction. IOW, there is no court of law that is ever going to convict a ham for causing interference to a freeloader.

Law is never going to be spelled out letter-for-letter, but that's not a problem if people are capable of thinking logically.

Of course you do. You chomp right down on the beak everytime you drag a thread off-topic, obfuscate an issue with logical fallacies, and even when you ignore a post that you can't distort or dispute. Crow is your main course for breakfast, lunch and dinner. Every weekend while you are in lockup the trustee serves it through the slot in your cell door, and when you are old enough to go to the bars they will be serving you crow hot-wings. I'm just wondering what you do with all the feathers....

Now aren't you curious to see what's in the rest of that post? Well, I'll tell you. It's filled with facts that, because of your communication deficit, make you look like an idiot with just about every post you make even now. So click or don't click -- either way you will try to distort the facts, or make up new lies to cover up your old lies. You are so predictable, Twist... LOL!

Your communication deficit is acting up again -- I have not snipped ANY of your posts since your last tantrum on the subject. Yet you continue to snip mine. That makes you both a hypocrite and a liar, Twist, whether you admit it (and apologize... LOL!) or not.

that much? Is the truth so hard for you to swallow? Well, I suppose it is when it's served with crow... LOL!!!

No, he's not. If the diode was shorted, it would have blown the fuse/breaker on the power supply (or melted something else if the supply wasn't protected). If the diode was open, the radio would have worked as normal when the power was connected properly. Neither were the case.

He was measuring from the negative terminal of the power supply to points inside the radio, where he was getting 12V everywhere. The only way that can happen is if the negative lead is disconnected. Try it yourself (no, it won't hurt the radio). What happened is that the reverse-polarity protection diode did it's job, and did it exceptionally well. When the power is connected backwards, the diode is supposed to show a short and blow the fuse, but since there wasn't any fuse it melted a power lead. That's one stout diode!

Anyway, the damage should be minimal, and certainly much less than if the diode had failed.

The only person that got confused was you when you tried to read between the lines. You can eliminate that confusion by limiting yourself to reading words that are spelled out in letters, not in projections of your bitterness.

Just ignore the TROLLs behind the ham licenses and they'll go away soon enough. That would include Georgie-girl Busch WA3MOJ, who never answers any questions, and DouGay Adair N8WWM, who cannot answer any questions but will post sexual BS because that's all he's capable of, and Frankie-fag Gilliland, who thinks he is intelligent but can't even get a ham license. The rest of us have posted good information when we can.

Maybe. Maybe not. It depends on your intent. If you are interfering with a illegal operator by jamming the frequency then you are in violation of the rules.

Nope, guess again. If I am licensed I can tune up, test, establish a contact or whatever on top of an illegal signal, as long as I identify, use the proper mode of transmission, and use legal procedures, I am legal. My legality has precedent over the illegal station. The illegal station has no right to be there, therefore has no rights...by virture of my license, I do. If you don't believe me, call the FCC.

You can tune up, but you can't deliberately jam a frequency. If your intent is to jam a frequency you are in violation.

Or if you switch off your firewall, to see what happens.
Windows is not a secure system, and software or malware can soon open ports or send messages to other systems so that they may connect.

By default, Windows installs protocols that are unlikely to be needed by most users. All my system has in the "Networks" is the dial-up adaptor and the TCP/IP protocol.

Assuming that you are just using the "swinging both ways" as a pun, I must disagree only on a minor point.

I believe that there are some posting on both sides to stir up trouble... but not "most". It only takes one or two doing that to really start things off.

Those posting "gay" crap, when it has nothing to do with CB, are only showing themselves to be trolls. They make the "pro-legal" issue look stupid, make those who use legal CB look like school kids and drop-outs. You make a good argument when you post technical reasons and ways to get the most without resorting to power.

Look it up... what type of tyraffic and which port is used for an echo request?
The port number is only a way of finding what you really want to know - what they are up to.

In this case, it appears that someone with the same IP number as you is trying to get a response from his system. This may be to see if he is on-line, to see if his system is open to abuse, or to trace him with something like Neotrace.
I expect that a ping will look more innocent on a firewall log than a NetBios request. If a ping is successful, maybe it would be appropriate to go for the kill, as the system is most likely open.

So, why is Steve getting pings from the IP number that appears in your header?
And, why have you suggested that he should switch his firewall off?

IF any of this is true, Frankie (and since you're an admitted liar it's doubtful), why can't you get an amateur license?

Sounds like your test equipment needs to be Grounded, not just shielded. How come you don't know that? And I've never yet seen a night-club that had a truly shielded audio system, so that "arguement" is moot.

BTW, some people <snip> posts to keep them of managable length and not

Well, I met your demands and then some, but you don't seem very interested in adhering to your own standard of behavior. What a hypocrite you are, right in the same boat with Hypocrite Landshark.

Again, I didn't tell Steve to switch his firewall off, My response was to Bessel Null. Think he's getting pings from the IP number thats in my header?

Know anything about Nachi? If you did you would know what NT has to do with it.

Thats good, but it never hurts to keep up with latest worms and virus's out there. I don't use zone alarm so I don't know if it has any real holes or weakness's.

Hmm..Maybe geo should do a definition update, followed by a complete

Most people have no idea they have it. You probably won't see it unless you see a lot of heavy traffic on your router. Or look in your "wins" folder, if you have files in it, you have it or have had it.

I can only go by the reviews I've read about ZL pro, and those have been good.
I also update my definitions quite frequently for my virus protection.

http://www.fcc.gov/eb/FieldNotices/2002/DOC-237597A1.html

And I can provide literally -hundreds- more. The deal is that a penalty may not be imposed without either "fair warning" or "reasonable expectation" of illegality. Every licensed amateur is considered to already have "fair warning", whether they are operating illegally on the CB or not. Unlicensed CBers are not exempt, as would be the case if a station inspection turns up a list of CB rules, a tag on the radio requiring compliance with FCC regs, or any other evidence that the person knew what he was doing was illegal. If you want I can even cite the case law (which applies not only to the FCC violations, but to most other criminal acts as well -- IOW, that list is also long). But it's easier if you exercise those fat little fingers and do a Google search for yourself. The keywords "fair warning" with "Diamond Construction" should get you most of those cases.

Now, are you going to adhere to your "golden rule" or not?

Anyone have any idea what the many many many digital tone burst occuring on channel 23 are? I know that channel 23 was designated as a remote control channel even in the 1970s. I've heard remote control hobby airplanes there before, but in the last year or two there has been a substantial increase in these "packet radio" style tone burst on channel 23. I've heard them in Phoenix, AZ in South Carolina. The tone burst are present 24 hours a day, and are far too numerous and too frequent to be a person manually operating a remote controlled device such as a toy car or airplane. A remote control toy generates a constant carrier with varying tones, but these signals are occuring in short burts of tone sequences.

On October 5, Frank says:

>Regardless, I remember that there have been >find them.

Several days later, he stomps his foot, calls names, and insists on new demands with:

>I found the info, and I'll post it just as soon as >you come through with some answers.

LOL....end of your story, Frank.

>Well, I met your demands and then some,

Try meeting your own demands, Frank. I have no demands, Frank..in fact,
I have never made demands of you, but merely directed you to answer for your own claims, but you don't seem very interested in adhering to them. For once, if you can muster what's needed of you, forget about "me" and answer for yourself. You said, several days ago: "I'll post the specifics when I find them." Now, you claim you found the information, yet you place new demands with : "I found the info, and I'll post it just as soon as...."LOL.
So you see, Frank, it's not about ME, or anyone begging or demanding anything of you, but of merely reminding you of your own claim. Nothing more, nothing less. To sadly misinterpret such gentle reminders as "begging", does nothing but pay homage to your communication deficit.
Tsk tsk.

Harkening back 3-4 years I recall this group was filled with information. It didn't matter if you were a CB'er or Amateur everyone helped each other and discussed the radio hobby. Endless antenna design debates, equipment reviews and general how-to's made this group among the best. For all the petty and imbecile arguments you people should be ashamed. Get a life and stop worrying about what the other guy is doing unless he lives next door to you. I'm not taking sides but I think you should all STFU if you intend to argue. Sure Frank, I can adhere, but you are unable, and it's eating you up, judging by the frequency of insults you have the need to hurl with each post. You proved nothing. You merely took actions and posted them. For the most part, the FCC does NOT release to the media, courses of enforcement action information that include a disclaimer saying something to the effect of, "After multiple warnings, so and so was busted" unless it was a high profile case or some other reason merits it. Again, you are reading (much like Geogre, with his redundant retorts asking "Do you mean?", or "Are you saying?") something that is NOT there and assuming because it was not specifically mentioned and addressed, they were not warned. Nothing could be further from the truth.
Been there, done that, got the T-Shirt <g>, in other words, I KNOW what they do,,,you merely profess bullshit. I have nothing to prove and won't try to change your belief. Email the Big H or some other figurehead or flunky and inquire if a cb or amateur radio operator has had ANY action taken against him without a warning in the past, oh, say, five years,,,,,,and I didn't choose five arbitrarily....if you make the call, not only will you achieve comprehending the significance of the presented numeral, you will raise hell and attack me like never before, as nothing upsets you more than being proven wrong by a lowly cber, such as myself.

Gee Frank,,,in addition to your first error, you presented an example
WITH the warning intact. To wit:

>In June 1999, the Houston Field Office issued >a Notice

> of Violation for willful and malicious >interference to > radio communications in violation of Section >333 of the

> Communications Act of 1934, as amended

> (``Rules´´) and for transmitting unidentified
> Amateur

> radio communications in violation of >Section 97.119 of > the Rules. Meyers responded and denied >the violations.

And here is where you blew it, Frank. I am familiar with this case, Frank. For some odd reason, your examples all are missing data, and it says so on each and every one. Except on this one, you probably deliberately eliminated the rest of this story. See, after Mr. Meyers responded and denied the allegations, he committed same violations
several more times. Shazam!

>4. On January 13, 2000, the Commission's

>Houston Field

> Office issued Meyers a Notice of Apparent

>Liability for

> Forfeiture (``NAL´´) finding Meyers

>apparently liable for

> a forfeiture in the amount of $8,0001 The

>NAL stated

Yup,,,whole lotta Rosie missing from this story, In any event, the FCC WILL contact you folks, for mere cber infractions. As Frank says, with hammies, they (the FCC) may be taking a new approach that hammies "should know better." Wasn't that long ago the debate flared up here that the feds aren't being fair by enforcing hammie radio in this manner, when so many cbers are in violation. To those, one may say, just as many hammies are in violation, in some manner or other.

If you don't believe ME, YOU call the FCC. A hammie has no right to interfere with anything. Circumventing the law you are sworn to obey (by virtue of your license) by deliberately tuning up and keying without identifying to cause interference, is illegal. Hell, if you must break the law in order to delude yourself into thinking you are justified in upholding another aspect of it, you're no better than the intruder on your bands,,,,,,regardless your personal feelings of the matter.

W32/Nachi-A uses two files, dllhost.exe (10,240 bytes) and svchost.exe (19,728 bytes). Dllhost.exe is the main worm component and svchost.exe is a standard TFTP (Trivial File Transfer Protocol) server that is only used by the worm to transfer itself from a source to a target machine.

When the worm is run, it copies itself into the <Windows System>\Wins folder as dllhost.exe and uses the Windows Service Control Manager to create new Windows Services. The services RpcPatch and RpcTftpd are created.

RpcPatch, with the description "Network Connections Sharing", runs the copy of the worm and RpcTftpd, with the description "WINS Client", runs the accompanying TFTP server.

The worm then scans the network for computers on which to execute exploits. An ICMP Ping packet is sent first to check if a host is online. The Ping packet is followed by a WebDAV search request or an RPC DCOM exploit. If the exploit is sucessful W32/Nachi-A uses tftp.exe to copy the worm files from the source system.

Once the system is infected, W32/Nachi-A attempts to download and run security patches from the Microsoft's update websites. Depending on the operating system language W32/Nachi-A chooses the download URL from the following list:

There you go presenting the vigilante attitude that it's somehow ok for you to break the law only because you feel your breaking of the law is somehow upholding a more severe violation than the one you are committing.

You want to use that rationalization,,,,,,,,let's take it one step further. You heard about the impromptu gatherings that are a fad lately?
You know, where, say,,maybe a few dozen or even few hundred people show up at a pre-arranged meeting place and all shout a word or something, and then disburse immediately? Imagine applying this fad to the spectrum by radio ops,,,hammie, cbers, pirates,,,whatever. There wouldn't be a damn thing you, the FCC, or any other could do about it.
Bottom line,,,,your mindset, believing that by breaking the law to uphold another aspect of it, and claiming PROVE it, illustrates you are not about upholding the law in any manner whatsoever.

A non licensed station has no right of use to a frequency, a legaly authorized station can use a frequency that is in use by a unlicensed station, and there is nothing at all that is illegal about it.

Again twistys keep on topic no where did JJ say he was not going to identify, but if he does here an unlicensed station and he wants to call cq or tune up his amp etc he has every right to do so he is not interfering with a legal station . Anyhow why do you care so much about what hammies do, you interfere with stationsevry time you key up.

I agree.

Here is a example of their illogical logic:

A unlicensed driver is cruising down I-75. You are aware of this and say to yourself.....the hell with him! I have the right to this road and he doesn't, so I'm going to ram (interfere) his car off the road. You end up killing the guy, but you can not be held not.

Another less drastic example:

You and your buddy are driving down a two lane section of I-75.
Everyone seems to be going over the speed limit of 70mph, so you and your buddy decide to take the law into your own hands. You decide to drive parallel to each other and force everyone to slow down to 70mph.

Great plan eh?.... NOT. You and your buddy get pulled over by the state police. Why?.....Impeding the flow of traffic.

Impeding the flow of traffic is no different than jamming a frequency.

I have serviced alarm systems in the 27Mhz band, they were 5 watt units made by Baldwin Hawkeye Systems. The frequency allocations were mostly in between channels in the old RC "hole slots" or above channel 40.

Some of the car alarms also use CB bands for the pager units. My neigbors kept going off so much that I sampled the signal and retransmitted it at random 3-5am intervals until he stopped using the remote function of the alarm. Same type of things found with the original auto cell phones hooked to the horn.

You can key up and say cq all you want. Just don't be jamming the frequency. The point is just because someone else operates illegally doesn't give you the right to operate illegally to nullify them.

It has been concluded that the 911 hijackers were all rejected amateur radio operators. They had the same mindset as many of the amateurs on this group. Namely.....Fuck them all. Who cares if I fuck myself and my hobby in the process.

It doesn't give you the right to intentionally interfere with anything, legal or not.

>The illegal station has no right to be there,

Exactly.

Not true. Anyone has the right to transmit anywhere they see fit in an emergency.

(Who said anything about an emergency JR, due try to stay on topic your communication defict is showing.)

LOL.....he claimed an "illegal" station has no rights,,,,but they do in an emergency. The station doesn't gain "legality-status" by making a single, legal transmission in case of emergency, so it most definitely was on topic. It was presented in a manner so those without deficits in communication may comprehend just WHY, what he referred to as an "illegal station", most certainly does have rights, in this case, in an emergency. There are no absolutes. There are exceptions to every rule.

Read it again, and check your deficit.

>...by virture of my >license, I do.

No one is contesting your right to be there, Jerry, er, JJ. BUT,,,virtue of a license does NOT allow you to interfere, especially deliberately, with anything, anywhere on the spectrum, at any time.

(A non licensed station has no right of use to a frequency, a legaly authorized station can use a frequency that is in use by a unlicensed station, and there is nothing at all that is illegal about it.)

No one said any different. There is a huge difference between use and deliberate interference. See above. Emergency transmissions, whether from a legal station or not, you may not interfere with.

If you don't believe ME, YOU call the FCC. A hammie has no right to interfere with anything. Circumventing the law you are sworn to obey (by virtue of your license) by deliberately tuning up and keying without identifying to cause interference, is illegal.

(Again twistys keep on topic no where did JJ say he was not going to identify, but if he does here an unlicensed station and he wants to call cq or tune up his amp etc he has every right to do so he is not interfering with a legal station .)

No one is taking issue with such. The topic was deliberately interference,,,you can not do it, no matter what premise you present.

> Anyhow why do you care so much about what >hammies do,

LOL,,why do you care what cbers do?

> you interfere with stationsevry time you key

>up.

And just how did you arrive at such a grandiose lie? You were buried in this debate once or twice before,,,,,let's do it again.

You end up killing the guy, but you can not be held accountable because he was on the road illegally and you were not.

Excellent analogy. They don't even have to ram a guy, Tnom.
Intentionally slowing down to PREVENT another driver from passing because one may think the other doesn't have the right to drive above the speed limit is an offense itself,,anything from careless driving to obstruction of traffic may apply, and has the possibility to maim or kill.

Just ignore the TROLLs who hide behind false NICs, like Georgie-girl Busch WA3MOJ, DouGay Adairierre N8WWM, and Frankie-fag Gilliland, who never post anything but obstrufication and total BS. There's still good information here if you can get beyond that crap.

Got a question? Ask it. Answers will be forthcoming.

Wrong. Among the same piles of NAL's from which I found those reports there were plenty where people -were- sent a warning notice, many of them where the operator or pirate didn't have an amateur license.

If you can get past your communication deficit long enough to read those links, most are copies of FCC orders, which must document all information regarding each case from complaint to final disposition, and all due process inbetween. If a warning notice was sent, it would be documented in the order, as it is in many other cases.

Sure thing, Twist -- I contacted the FCC and had them edit out certain lines on are an idiot. It's all part of the vast conspiricy against you, Twist... LOL!

> See, after Mr. Meyers

A Notice of Violation is -not- a warning. It is a notice that the perp has been busted. A Notice of Apparent Liability is only part of the sentencing procedure for the violation. It doesn't matter what he did after the Notice of Violation was issued because he was already busted for what he had already done. "Shazam!"

Then you go right ahead and provide the rest of the story for this case, and for the hundreds of cases where the official FCC documents are incongruent to -your- version of the stories.

> In any event, the FCC
>WILL contact you folks, for mere cber infractions.

I'm sure they will.

> As Frank says, with >hammies, they (the FCC) may be taking a new approach that hammies
>"should know better."

It's the same approach they have been taking for many years. The FCC documents prove that much. The problem is that your communication deficit prevents you from reading them.

> Wasn't that long ago the debate flared up here >that the feds aren't being fair by enforcing hammie radio in this >manner, when so many cbers are in violation. To those, one may say, just >as many hammies are in violation, in some manner or other.

The reason is money. Unlicensed violators usually require "fair warning" in the form of a warning notice, which gives them a second chance to shape up their act. And many of them take that second chance, leaving no way for the FCC to recoup the money spent to track and deal with the freeloader. Licensed violators can be busted without that second chance, and therefore are a more 'economical' target for enforcement.

The changes in enforcement of unlicensed violators in the future will be in the station inspections and investigations. They will be looking for evidence which demonstrates that the operator knows of the illegality of his actions, such as admissions of such in his transmissions, in station records (which, for an unlicensed operator, could be something as innocuous as a CB handbook from Radio Shack), and even in tracing newsgroup posts back to an account used by the suspected violator. Ain't the internet great?

So do you want your crow raw or cooked?

LOL.....he claimed an "illegal" station has no rights,,,,but they do in an emergency. The station doesn't gain "legality-status" by making a single, legal transmission in case of emergency, so it most definitely was on topic. It was presented in a manner so those without deficits in communication may comprehend just WHY, what he referred to as an "illegal station", most certainly does have rights, in this case, in an emergency. There are no absolutes. There are exceptions to every rule.
Read it again, and check your deficit.

You show me in writing where it says in case of emergency it is legal to make a transmission on any frequency. And of course JJ wasn't talking about keying up on anyone with an emergency, I am sure an emergency would be a short brief transmission with JJ helping the situation, since that is the idea behind amatuer radio unlike cbers who key up over each othr and jam each other intentionally everday 24-7

No one said any different. There is a huge difference between use and deliberate interference. See above. Emergency transmissions, whether from a legal station or not, you may not interfere with.

No one said anything about emergency transmissions, except you changing the topic hams participate in emergency situations they don't interfere with emergencys, you know exactly what he is talking about Instead you try to change the topic to emergency transmission.
In fact here is a catch 22 for you tipsy, if you can prove an emergency transmission is legal then JJ wouldn't key up on them and your point would be invalid , if it is illegal, I am willing to bet again he doesn't key up and interfere with an emergency. But since you said they are allowed that means they are not Ilelgal then right?

If you don't believe ME, YOU call the FCC. A hammie has no right to interfere with anything. Circumventing the law you are sworn to obey (by virtue of your license) by deliberately tuning up and keying without identifying to cause interference, is illegal.

(Again twistys keep on topic no where did JJ say he was not going to identify, but if he does here an unlicensed station and he wants to call cq or tune up his amp etc he has every right to do so he is not interfering with a legal station .)

No one is taking issue with such. The topic was deliberately interference,,,you can not do it, no matter what premise you present.

> Anyhow why do you care so much about what
>hammies do,

_
LOL,,why do you care what cbers do?

I posed the question to you why do you answer a question with a question now

And just how did you arrive at such a grandiose lie? You were buried in this debate once or twice before,,,,,let's do it again.

well if there are other stations on the same frequency and you are talking skip you are interfering with people you don't even know are out there. Now go wash off because the only pewrson who will get buried as usual is you.

the backlights for the lcd display quit working,,,,again these burned out a few years ago,,and he had them repaired in tenessee at a shop he found,,it only set him back 30 bucks so this time he takes it to litchfeild radio here in ohio and the guy doesnt even pop the top claims he cant fix it,parts no longer available so he turns to me
seems like a simple fix took guy in tenesse a matter of minutes do any of you know of a part number for replacement lights for this

If I call cq on top of an illegal signal, identify, use the correct mode for the band segment, at legal power levels, ect, I am not operating illegally. The illegal signal is illegally interfering with my signal.

There you go presenting the vigilante attitude that it's somehow ok for you to break the law only because you feel your breaking of the law is somehow upholding a more severe violation than the one you are committing.

I am not commiting any violaton to call cq or start a communication with another licensed station on top of an illegal signal. As long as I identify, use the proper mode, power levels, ect., I am legal. The illegal signal is not, the illegal signal is interfering with legal transmissions and is in violation of FCC regulations.

LOL.....he claimed an "illegal" station has no rights,,,,but they do in an emergency. The station doesn't gain "legality-status" by making a single, legal transmission in case of emergency, so it most definitely was on topic. It was presented in a manner so those without deficits in communication may comprehend just WHY, what he referred to as an "illegal station", most certainly does have rights, in this case, in an emergency. There are no absolutes. There are exceptions to every rule.
Read it again, and check your deficit.

There you go talking out of both sides of your mouth. Yes, a station can transmit anywhere in case of an emergency where life is in danger. That being so, then that emergency transmission is legal, if it were illegal under those conditions, then a station would be forbidden to transmit, even in an emergency, on a frequency they were not licensed to use. The emergency status makes it legal for that emergency communications.
Interfering with such a transmission would be illegal. We are not talking about emergency communications, but signals that are illegal.
(A non licensed station has no right of use to a frequency, a legaly authorized station can use a frequency that is in use by a unlicensed station, and there is nothing at all that is illegal about it.)
>_
No one said any different. There is a huge difference between use and deliberate interference. See above. Emergency transmissions, whether from a legal station or not, you may not interfere with.

If you don't believe ME, YOU call the FCC. A hammie has no right to interfere with anything. Circumventing the law you are sworn to obey (by virtue of your license) by deliberately tuning up and keying without identifying to cause interference, is illegal.
I have spoken to the FCC on this subject and they do not consider the transmitting by licensed stations on top of illegal stations, (as in the case of unlicensed stations that transmit in the 10 meter band), as being deliberate interference. The hams are legally using the band they have a right to by virtue of their license, the illegal station has no rights. They are considered to be causing illegal interference to the licensed stations by virtue of transmitting on a band they are not licensed to use.

LOL,,why do you care what cbers do?

Don't care as long as they stay on the cb band and out of ham bands, unless they are licensed to use the ham bands.

Bottom line...I am not breaking any law by transmitting over an illegal signal as long as I id, use the proper mode, use legal power levels, ect.

I picked up at an estate sale today a Sears Roadtalker40 (am only) CB. The box was rough (very rough) but the Styrofoam packing was intact and it is very obvious that it has never been used. The mike and wiring harness's were still in their original packing and it has both hump and under dash mounts. It also has the mail in warranty card, the FCC CB license application (grin) which is dated 1976 and the owners manual. It looks and smells new.
The only flaw is the channel selector knob, it appears the glue used to affix the center tube to the main knob couldn't withstand 26 years sitting. It's not a big problem as the selector has a standard 1/4 in shaft and most any knob (a pretty one) would work.
After 28 years on the road in a truck I don't want anything that talks back to me so am open for offers or maybe trades in the N.E. Okla. area.

True, the diode is not causing the problem he is seeing... but it may well have been damaged at the same time.
After finding the O/C problem, he should replace the diode as they are cheap

I got exactly the same a little while back. unless your system gets a "received" reply from the server, it will keep trying to send it again. My system sent quite a few copies, until I disconnected, reconnected, and tried again.

As for your CB problem, it sounds like the radio is a grounded chassis type.. and the supply is disconnected on the negative side. Check the power lead black wire, the wires from the socket to the board, any coils from the socket to the board, and any PCB tracks from the neative PCB connection to the main negative foil on the board.

Peter.

But not on the level you see it here. I have used other newsgroups and seen very few troll posts - this group is full of troll posts.
I fail to see why you seem to defend people who are more concerned with sexual matters than the law or any type of radio. They do nothing to promote legal use, they just weaken any legal arguments by attaching the "pro-legal" label to their "gay" posts.
You, on the other hand, have made some good "pro-legal" posts, like giving ways to get the best from a system without using amps. Such posts do much to improve the view of and promote legal CB use, while the "antikeyclowns" are doing the opposite.
Who would you consider more reliable... someone who makes a good, reasoned argument for something - or someone who posts angry, childish, hate messages?

>THIS NEWSGROUP is "overspill from the Amateur groups" -- it was >created to kick the CBers out of the hammie groups.

I have seen that document. That is not so much an "overspill", as an attempt to create a more appropriate group for CB. The differences between the two hobbies make it more appropriate to have separate groups for the two.
The problem is that people are still posting messages to the wrong group. There's nowt wrong with technical posts on this group, those who are not interested can ignore them... but some messages (such as Ham equipment sales) should clearly go on an Amateur group. If people are interested in such things, they should at least be reading posts to such groups.

Big deal.
Go into a butcher's shop, and say you are a "ham" ;~)

You need to get out a bit more... there's more to the World than Amateur radio and CB, or some stupid "Ham vs CB" war. A ham callsign means nothing to most people in the World, and will get you no extra respect outside of the Amateur world.
You say you are a professional engineer... how many of the jobs you have had would have been your's if you were just an Amateur, rather than a professional? I doubt if I would have got any of my jobs with nothing more than an Amateur callsign.

Put it in perspective. Radio may be a big part of your life, but it is little or nothing in the lives of most people. An Amateur callsign will mean nothing to such people.

>It also means that he is a unique individual and willing to put his name to his >statements, not an anonymous troll that hides behind a keyboard.

Only as far as Ham related newsgroups or chatrooms go. What will a callsign mean to the vast majority of inhabitants of this planet, who have no knowledge of Amateur radio and related callsigns?

Are Amateurs the only "unique" people in the World?
Anyway, I thought that you would understand why people may wish keep their personal details from newsgroups... next time they may get your real 'phone number.
Before you get mad, I totally disagree with such behaviour but it will happen with newsgroups. Many of us, including myself, have had abusive e-mails sent to our e-mail addresses... what do you think would happen if we made our names, addresses and 'phone numbers available?

> I might get a
>callsign myself for just those reasons!

I thought that you already put your name to your statements... Frank Gilliland.
If you want to make it clearer, you could put your address and phone number on the bottom of your posts - but I would not recommend it.

Do you not already have an ID number given by the goverment? You could use that, at least it is something that will be understood by everyone in America (and many outside), not just those with the same hobby. But, get ready for the abuse of your personal information.

If you must get an Amateur licence, at least do it for the right reason... not just for an ID number.

I am not defending the "children" on this group. I am merely pointing out that they are supposed to be "Hams", and "pro-legal"... yet they post hate messages about sexuality.

When did a person's sexuality become a legal issue - or related to CB.
Exactly, they are Trolls. They use the "pro-legal" label as a cover for their real intentions - to spoil people's pleasure from their hobby.

In case you are posting your crud without the benefit of experience of this group, then you need to be aware that I have previously told people that they do not need amps, I have posted information about UK CB rules when it was useful in a thread, I have spoke out against certain CB equipment available in shops - and I have made it clear that any CB I use is fully legal, with no illegal equipment attached.

Ever wonder why, when I have posted so much "pro-legal" stuff, the "keyclowns" do not chase me from the group... yet the so called "pro-legal"
people do?
Maybe the "pro-legal" label is a cover for their real intentions.

>But then it's easier to point fingers and make >accusations

Which is exactly what you and the Trolls are doing.
All those accusations pointed at me, yet they could not prove one of them.

The law says "innocent until proven guilty", so let's just remind you or their policy on truth and proof...

As they say, they don't have to be honest... that includes being honest about their intentions.
They do not care for the law... they only want to spoil people's enjoyment of CB or this newsgroup.

> than to actually do anything about it because to do >anything about it requires hard evidence.

Ever wonder why these "antikeyclowns" spend so much time on a newsgroup, where there are so few CBers... and they are NOT changing anything in the real world?
Why are they not out there in the real world, doing real things to stop illegal use in their area?
Ever wonder why they are more interested in sexuality than legality or CB?
Ever wonder why they never post anything of use - what people can do, rather than whining all the time?

Although I have had disagreements with Sparky, at least he has made useful posts about how to get the best from your system without breaking the law. Such posts are actully useful to the newsgroup - they are on-topic and helpful.
Posts about jockstraps, perverted behaviour, sexuality, etc are neither on-topic or useful.

Hey Brain, I'm not inherently familiar with the UK rules pertaining to cb, but I know y'all need a license for a telly, so it wouldn't surprise me if the laws were different. I'm intimately familiar with the FCC inner workings as per cb scofflaws,,,more so than some self-professed hammies that claim to have friends that are FCC lawyers and feel that qualifies them to espouse bullshit about what the US communication laws actually allow and disallow.

Yes, we do need a licence for a TV. Although it is to fund the BBC, it is still needed if you only use it to watch Satelite TV (for which you pay again). They say that a licence is even needed to use a TV for games such as a Playstation or X-Box.

The licence covers all members of a family in that house. The rule for TV use away from home is that the licence covers use of battery operated equipment with an internal antenna. I have yet to see one with an internal antenna - they are all telescopic, so external of the case.

A while back, they were going after truckers, who had a licence for their home, but needed one for for using a TV in the truck. More recently they are after people such as students, who may use one away from home.

With CB licensing, they have never gone out to get those without a licence... the costs would outweight any revenue gained. They just add it to the offences if a person is checked or busted for some other reason.
They have never gone looking for people to "bust", they are (and always have been) under-funded.
The CB licence is due to be removed soon, so we will have a free CB service.

The incredibly small number of people who are busted will relate to those who have left the RA with no other choice, and a clear case in court.
First of all, someone would need to be reported for interference to other equipment. These reported people would then get a visit and, if illegal equipment is found or they are unlicensed, may get illegal equipment (such as USA CBs) snatched, and a warning.
The 20 to 30 "busts" per year will be those who are persistant despite warnings and snatched equipment - where the RA can be sure of success in court.

Peter.

Some people seem to believe that some antennas work best for receive and others for transmit... but it is wrong. An antenna will work just as well for both, either it is good or it is not.
One issue could be that some people may have their squelch set higher, or they may not be listening for the weak signals. Another issue is that a receiver being swamped with many fairly strong signals will have the gain drop, so a poor antenna will give the radio weaker signals and the RX gain may go back up.

A few years back, most of the UK TV stations shut down at night. When this happened, my TV RX gain would go back up and I could pick up remaining transmitters from 100s of miles away - on a small indoor antenna.

If, on a good antenna, your TX seems to be much worse than your RX, then have the radio checked.

>Well, I checked the SWR. 1.5 @ ch.1 and a hair below 2 on 40.

The readings suggest that the antenna is slightly long, but not enough to worry about too much. Other nearby objects will affect the SWR.
SWR is not critical, a vertical dipole will normally be about 75 Ohms - giving a 1.5:1 SWR reading at best.

> As for the inverted >dipole, do you reccommend i mount it as an 'L'?

Vertical would be best but, if space is limited, you may need to settle for something more compact.

Peter.

On my Web site, you should see a list of browsers that I use to test the site... Avant is in there, with a few others. I have just started using Opera to test pages, so that will appear on the list at the next update. There are also links to some of the download sites.
I know that I find one of the browsers very slow, but I cannot remember which it is.

Those who only want a basic browser could try OffByOne, it is so small that it will fit on a floppy. It has no scripting or Active-X support, but it is very fast because it has so little slowing it down. I do sometimes use it for surfing, but mainly use it to test pages.

Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1364 with a release date of Friday, October 3rd 2003 to follow in 5-4-3-2-1.

The following is a Q-S-T. The comment period closes on Morse code restructuring, Logbook of the World makes its debut and a new D-X

RADIO LAW: MORSE PETITION COMMENTARY CLOSES

If you have not yet filed comments on the frst seven Morse related rule making requests, you are you of luck. Newsline's Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, tells us why:

The why is simple. The period for filing comments on this initial group of seven Morse code related rule making petitions closed on Monday, September 29th. This, before several other requests that favor retaining Morse have been made available for public comment.

Of those in the first group, some petitioners had suggested eliminating the remaining 5 Word Per Minute C-W test. Others wanted various levels of change in Morse testing. In all, well over 2000 comments that were filed by the closing date.

And what about the pro-code side of the debate? Will their views ever be assigned a rule making designation? That's really up to the FCC.
Those waiting include the request from FISTS, the international Morse preservation society. That one not only asks the FCC to retain the 5 word per minute C-W exam for General class license, but to also require that Extra class pass a 12 word per minute test. FISTS also wants written exams stiffened as well.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, reporting.

We will have more on the latest round in the Morse debate in future newscasts. (ARNewsline(tm))

RESTRUCTURING: LUXEMBOURG DROPSS HF MORSE REQUIREMENT

Yet another country has announced the dropping of the Morse code requirement for HF bands operation. As of the 25th of September, radio amateurs in Luxembourg with a CEPT Class 2 licence and callsigns in the LX3 series have had use of all of the HF amateur bands. (RSGB)

FROM THE ARRL LOGBOOK OF THE WORLD PREMIERES

The ARRL's new Logbook of the World secure electronic contact confirmation and logging system officially began operation on September 15th. The Logbook of the World system is a repository of log records submitted by users of the system. When both participants in a QSO submit matching QSO records, the result is a QSL that can be used for ARRL award credit.

To minimize the chance of fraudulent submissions to Logbook of the World, all QSO records must be digitally signed using a digital certificate obtained from ARRL. Getting a certificate requires verification of the licensee's identity either through mail verification for U S hams or inspection by ARRL of required documentation for those outside of the United States.

Software developed by ARRL can be used to convert a log file into a file of digitally signed QSO data, ready for submission. Full details on the system are in cyberspace at www.arrl.org/lotw. (ARRL)

REPEATER LINKING: ECHOLINK SAYS YES TO LOTW

Meantime, the Amateur Radio Internet linking system EchoLink has announced that it will begin accepting digital certificates issued by the American Radio Relay League's Logbook of the World program/ This, as an alternate means of authenticating new users.

According to Echolink creator Jonathan Taylor, K1RFD, system security is critical, and all new EchoLink users must be validated before being allowed access. In many cases,these people are asked to provide proof of license for verification.

Taylor says thst EchoLink system administrators currently process dozens of Amateur license photocopies each day, received by fax and e-mail. To streamline the process, participants in Logbook of the World will now be able to prove their identity to EchoLink using a that digital certificate, as an alternative to submitting a license copy. (K1RFD)

AT THE FCC: FCC COMMISSIONER SAYS YES TO BPL AND ARRL OBJECTS

FCC Commissioner Kathleen Q. Abernathy has taken the position that Broadband over Power Line is important to the future of cyberspace communications. Speaking before a United Powerline Council conference an September 22nd, Abernatjy said that the introduction of BPL will contribute to what she terma as a broadband nirvana.

Addressing the council, Abernathy not only expressed enthusiasm for Broadband over Powerline technology. She went so far as to recommend the elimination or substantial modification of existing rules governing its deployment.

The ARRL Letter says hat the League was quick to respond. In a tersely worded September 25th fax to Abernathy, ARRL Chief Executive Officer David Sumner, K1ZZ, asserted that the commissioner overlooked some significant issues in her Nirvana analogy. In fact, Sumner called B-P-L a nightmare noteing that technical showings submitted by the ARRL and others in response to the Commission's Notice of clearly establish that BPL is a significant source of radio spectrum pollution. Sumner went on to say that it cannot be implemented without causing harmful interference to already established over-the-air radio services. (ARRL, published news reports)

AMATEUR RADIO SURVIVAL: UCF CLUB EVICTON FOLLOW-UP

A follow-up on the story of a college radio club thats been evicted after 31 years of continious service. The news is pretty positive as we hea from Amateur Radio Newsline's Mert Garlick, N6AWE:

The future of he University of Central Florida Amateur Radio Club is now in the hands of the school's Provost. This, as a direct result of hams from around the nation contacting the college to voice your dismay over the eviction of the club station after 31 years of operation from its campus location.

But even with all the community and political support, Mike Potaczala, KC4NUS, advises the College of Arts and Sciences is unwilling to quash the eviction. In fact, they have gone so far as to tell the Provost they no longer want any interaction with the radio club.

Potaczala, who is a staff advisor of the University of Central Florida Amateur Radio Club, says that now the Provost at least has a base understanding of the club's benefit to the students and the community at large. More important, he is willing to help the club find a place to relocate on campus and is in the process of putting together the relocation cost figures. Unfortunately, the he does not feel he can justify directly allocating money from the university's budget to fund the relocation process. As a result, funding will have to come from school's Student Government, state and federal grants, and donations from the community.

Right now, the club is seeking help from anyone experienced in researching and writing proposals for state and federal grants. If you can assist in this project please contact the club via its website. That U-R-L appears in the print edition of this weeks Amateur Radio Newsline report.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, Im Mert Garlick, N6AWE.

AT THE FCC: POWELL SAYS HE PLANS TO STAY

Federal Communications Commission Chairman Michael Powell says hat he plans to stay at the agency until the end of the Bush administration. Powell came under widespread criticism earlier this year for pushing thrugh new media ownership limits that allow television networks to acquire more local stations and permit a company to own a newspaper, television station and radio outlets in a single market. His announcement halts speculation that he might be leaving the agency. (Published reports)

ENFORCEMENT: GOOD NEWS FOR NJ REPEATER

Meantime on this side of the Atlantic theres some really good news for a New Jersey repeater operator. Tthe FCC's Daryl Duckworh, NN0W, explains why:

Duckworth: "The Enforcement Bureau has closed the matter of the technical compliance and coordination problems of the N2CTD repeater of Elizabeth Olsen in Farmingdale New Jersey on 146.775 MHZ. This is in view of replaced repeater equipment, corrected deficient operations and proper coordination."

In its letter closing the case, the FCC took the opportunity to remind N2CTD that the decision to operate a station as a repeater is a totally voluntary one. That Repeaters are a convenience, not a necessity. Also that all stations including repeaters must have a licensee and a control operator capable of ensuring the immediate and proper operation of a station regardless of the type of control. (FCC, RAIN)

ENFORCEMENT: YOU NEED MORE THAN A TECH ON 17 METERS

Kelly G. Jones, K0EMD, of Fordland Missouri and Kenneth W. Paul, N0VDP, who resides in Lake City Minnesota have both been told by he FCC to stop operating in the 18 Mhz band. The reason for the notes is that both hams are Technician class license holders and Tech's do not have any operating privileges in the 17 meter Amateur band.

In its September 10th letter to the pair the FCC requested each to respond to within 20 days with whatever material either wanted to have considered in regard to the matter. The Commission says that the information submitted will be used to determine what further action the government might take. (FCC)

WITH THE SCOUTS: JOTA IS COMING

On a much lighter note, October 18th and 19th are the dates for the scouts 2003 Jamboree on the Air. Amateur Radio Newsline's Mark Abramowicz, NT3V, takes a look at the special relationship between ham radio and scouting:

When you think of Scouts and a Jamboree, images of tents, the aromas from all those goodies cooking in a dutch oven or a pot on the fire, and young men enjoying the outdoors might come to mind.

But add JOTA - or Jamboree on the Air - and the recipe for a great weekend is complete.

JOTA is sponsored by the World Scouting Bureau of the World Organization of the Scout Movement. This is the 46th year for the annual event.

Its goal is a simple one: connecting Scouts with other Scouts around the country and around the world by way of ham radio.

For many of those who take part, the fun starts with the campout - but the friendship and fellowship come through contacts on the radio. Jean Wolfgang, WB3IOS, is the American Radio Relay League's educational programs coordinator. She says several Scout councils in the United States schedule a campout around JOTA.

Wolfgang: "A lot of times the fall camporee falls this same weekend and so districts will arrange their camporee around the JOTA and then the hams come in and put up the big tarps and set up antennas.."

--

She says ham operators - whether adult Scouters or simply the fathers or friends of Scouts - bring their radios to Field Day-type settings - some in tents or cabins, others in picnic groves. They attract many a mike-shy Scout to come over and listen to the chatter from the radio. Maybe it's a Scout camp in Michigan, a community center in Arizona, a radio shack in Australia, or a hut in Panama.

--

Wolfgang: "It's more hands on, get the kids on the radio. And it creates friendships between Scouts in different countries, places that they would never talk otherwise to other Scouts."

--

The exchange is easy: a name, a location, Scout rank, age, and hobbies. That's for starters. Once the kids get going, you'd be surprised how much they enjoy talking to someone across the country or across the globe.

It's not a contest. But it's easy to generate a pile-up as operators scanning the bands look for stations calling: "CQ Jamboree" or "CQ JOTA."

And, Wolfgang says, the activity isn't restricted to just the boys.

Wolfgang: "This event is also for Girl Scouts," she says. "It's been a real struggle to get Girl Scouts to, the Girl Scout Leaders to find out about it."

--

And, of course, there are Girl Guides and co-ed Venture Crews. All are welcome.
Wolfgang says you may help turn someone on to the fun of Amateur Radio by taking part.

Wolfgang: "The League sees it as an opportunity to expose young people who may not be exposed any other way to ham radio," Wolfgang says. "And, although they may not turn out to be a ham in the next year or two - there'll be a time in their life when they'll settle down and may think of ham radio as a prospective hobby."

--

For the Amateur Radio Newslline, I'm Mark Abramowicz, NT3V.

--

The Jamboree on he Air is a world-wide event. Scouts may operate for 48 hours or any part of the time starting on Saturday at 00.00 hours until Sunday 24.00 hours local time. For more information visit the Jamboree on the Air website. Its in cyberspace at www.scout.org/wse/jota.shtml (ARNewsline(tm))

ENFORCEMENT: UK GOES AFTER PIRATE BROADCASTERS WITH NEW ARREST LAW

If you decide to become a pirate broadcaster in the United Kingdom, getting caught will now be allot more than the seizure of your transmitting gear. You will now be going to jail. Jeramy Boot joins us from Nottingham in the U-K with more:

New powers of arrest were introduced on the 18th of September in an attempt to combat pirate radio stations. The police, working with Radiocommunications Agency investigators, will now be able to arrest a pirate broadcaster or anybody suspected of supporting or facilitating illegal broadcasting.

Previously police could only detain someone if they suspected them of giving a false name and address or another criminal act, such as a breach of the peace or assault. The new powers of arrest will also extend to acts of deliberate interference with radio communications and hoax calls, especially false distress calls.

The Communications Minister Stephen Timms said: "These new powers will be an important weapon in the campaign against pirate broadcasters. By interfering with communications services which are vital for public safety, pirates can put lives at risk. They also cause interference with other licensed radio users and can be a social nuisance to those who live near pirate stations."

Jeramy Boot, G4NJH.

Unlicensed broadcasters detained under these new U-K powers could face an unlimited fine or up to two years in prison. For other transmitting offences such as unlicensed use of business, marine, or amateur radio station the maximum penalty is a 5000 Pound fine and / or 6 months in prison plus forfeiture of any radio gear. Currently 5000 pounds comes out to a bit over 8000 U-S dollars and thats allot of money and jail time for talking unlicensed on the air. (GB2RS)

INTERNATIONAL - UK: UK ISSUING 5 MHZ NOV'S AGAIN

The United Kingdom's Radio Communications Agency says that it will resume issuing of 5 MHz Notices of Variation to permit more hams onto the band to expand propagation studies. A United Kingdom Notice of Variation is similar to the FCC's Special Temporary Authority document. In this case the privilege is reserved for United Kingdom Full Amateur License holders. British Intermediate and Foundation Amateur License holders and Short-Wave Listeners are also encouraged to participate in the experiment by submitting reception reports or by working on the experiment with an Notice of Variation holder. (GB2RS)

INTERNATIONAL CANADA: VO1MRC BACK ON 5 MHZ

And the U-K is not the only place where 5 Mhz is making news. To the norrth, V-Oh1-M-R-C, the Marconi Radio Club of Newfoundland club station, has resumed its experimentation on 60 metres. The permit to comtinue comrs as the result of Radio Amateurs of Canada recommending to that nations radio regulators to grant a request from the club to continue with its work on the 5 MHz band until the end of 2003. THAT FINAL ITEM: A NEW RECORD FOR WI-FI

And finaly, a group of researchers in Poland have set a new wireless LAN or Wi-Fi record. Q-News Felix Scerri, VK4FUQ, has the details:

Interline Wireless Technology, a Polish company has reportedly set a world record in stretching the range of a Wi-Fi network for an amazing 110 Kms at 2.4 GHz. They achieved this using an antenna developed by them and an INTEL Wireless Access Point.

The Interline report on their web site www.interline.pl - in Polish - seems to show and say that, on their mountain-top site, in what we would consider "Amateur Radio" field-day conditions, they generated 500mW into a 27dB 1.1m off-axis parabolic section dish. It seems to say that the reverse direction from the base station was 6 watts into a 2.4m dish.

And it was all done, ham radio style. (Q-News)

I don't click on links, Frank, and for very good reason.

In June 1999, the Houston Field Office issued
a Notice
      of Violation for willful and malicious interference to radio communications in violation of Section 333 of
the Communications Act of 1934, as amended (``Act´´), for violation of Section 97.101(d) of the Commission's rules
    (``Rules´´) and for transmitting unidentified Amateur
      radio communications in violation of Section 97.119 of the Rules. Meyers responded and denied the violations.

And here is where you blew it, Frank. I am familiar with this case, Frank. For some odd reason, your examples all are missing data, and it says so on each and every one. Except on this one, you probably deliberately eliminated the rest of this story.

>Sure thing, Twist -- I contacted the FCC and

Now, I don't believe that at all. More like YOU edited out the stuff.

My turn to hurl a name...you are the idiot, as Frank Gilliland's are uneducated..and it's all a c-o-n-s-p-i-r-a-c-y against you...LOL.

See, after Mr. Meyers
responded and denied the allegations, he committed same violations several more times. Shazam!

>A Notice of Violation is -not- a warning. It is a >notice that the perp has been busted.

Exactly,,,along with a demand to respond. Most would heed that call, Frank,,,take it as a w-a-r-n-i-n-g. Semantic spin on the meaning and term is your game, not the rest of the world's.

>A Notice of Apparent Liability is only part of >the sentencing procedure for the violation.

No, it's not,,it is NOT part of the sentencing at all. The department that decides who to go after, the department who sets the enforcement action (if any) is separate from those in the field that track or find the culprit in addition to the administration personell..

>doesn't matter what he did after the Notice of >Violation was issued because he was already >busted for what he had already done.

>"Shazam!"

Wrong, as it most certainly matters what was done. Ignore it, and you betcha ass you're gonna have to pay the piper.

4.   On January 13, 2000, the Commission's Houston Field Office issued Meyers a Notice of Apparent Liability
for Forfeiture (``NAL´´) finding Meyers
apparently liable for a forfeiture in the amount of $8,0001 The NAL stated

Yup,,,whole lotta Rosie missing from this story,

>Then you go right ahead and provide the rest >of the story for this case, and for the hundreds >of cases where the official FCC documents >are incongruent to -your- version of the

They aren't incongruent, Frank, nor MY versions, merely the way things are done. That you would take a personal issue with me over your lack of knowledge is paramount of what this group expects of you.
You merely aren't familiar with the process currently being followed, but you're about to be schooled in such , so you will know in the future.

In any event, the FCC
WILL contact you folks, for mere cber infractions.

>I'm sure they will.

As Frank says, with
hammies, they (the FCC) may be taking a new approach that hammies "should know better."

>It's the same approach they have been taking >for many years. The FCC documents prove >that much. The problem is that your >communication deficit prevents you from >reading them.

The documents, despite your claim, do NOT list ALL nuances involved with the action. I know you want to believe this, but it simply isn't so.
Along with the warning notices being deleted from your "official FCC reports" are the names of the public officials responding to and involved with each case, in addition to other circumstances that you failed to acknowledge, but quickly and erroneously claimed "all information is presented." Simply not so.
So you see, the documents do NOT present the case(s) in it's entrirety as you claim.

Wasn't that long ago the debate flared up here that the feds aren't being fair by enforcing hammie radio in this manner, when so many cbers are in violation. To those, one may say, just as many hammies are in violation, in some manner or other.

>The reason is money. Unlicensed violators >usually require "fair warning" in the form of a >warning notice, which gives them a second

Wait a second.....if the unlicensed violator received a warning, and as you say, they "take that second chance",,,,,,why would their be a need to track them? If they weren't tracked in the first place, then how the hell did they receive the "fair" warning you speak of? And once they WERE tracked, what makes you mistakenly feel they have no manner in which to do it again? They already have the info, Frank, IF the culprit was intiitially tracked.

Absolutely. It illustrates ludicrous claims like the one you just made and preserves them for posterity so all can enjoy your ill-conceived beliefs. I' not even going to inquire as to why you believe such bullshit, 'cause it doesn't matter as it is has no shred of truth whatsoever. I absolutely love usenet, you know that by now. I especially like talking to Uncle Charlie (his real handle) on the Superbowl. I achieved what several hammies didn't think possible, but what many cbing-boaters already knew. Even you can do the math, Frank......no land visible, 360 degree view of salt water....an Antron in the Crows nest or on top the mast. Now,,,how do you personally feel 3 watts out on HF is going to radiate on AM. SSB? How about 100? Gee, suddenly those numbers are taking on incredible values, eh? I don't need big watts,,I do the world just fine, barefoot,,,,,I've done it on the freeband and I;ve done it on the cb channels. That you feel one is going to hunt me down and try and track me for talking DX is a chance I'm willing to take,,,,,almost 4 years worth now.....so,,yea,, I love usenet and all of you impotent wannabe radio cops that go with it...LOL.

Soon as you manage to catch one, I'll let you know. Grabbing at flies and hallucinating they have feathers has been one of your more entertaining endeavors.

LOL.....he claimed an "illegal" station has no rights,,,,but they do in an emergency. The station doesn't gain "legality-status" by making a single, legal transmission in case of emergency, so it most definitely was on topic. It was presented in a manner so those without deficits in communication may comprehend just WHY, what he referred to as an "illegal station", most certainly does have rights, in this case, in an emergency. There are no absolutes. There are exceptions to every rule. Read it again, and check your deficit.

>You show me in writing where it says in case >of emergency it is legal to make a >transmission on any frequency.

HAhaha..lokk at the hammie that doesn't know the law...LOL!
Nah,,,I'd rather watch you continue to illustrate how you know not much of FCC law.
It's there. Find it. Perhaps someone will take pity on you and inform you how wrong you are, but highly doubtful.

>And of course JJ wasn't talking about keying

>up on anyone with an emergency,

I never said he was. Once again, he claimed an illegal station has no rights, which was wrong. I illustrated an exception of his claim.

>I am sure an emergency would be a short brief >transmission

See,,,you "can* comprehend when whacked over the head a few times. The duration of the signal is off topic and means nothing. The gist once again, illustrates an amateur may NOT deliberately interfere with ANYTHING. Period.

>with JJ helping the situation,

>since that is the idea behind amatuer radio _

No, it isn't. This "idea" you present is not adhered to by all hammies..look at N8 and "arron's boyz" and yourself. Your mistaken and erroneous belief that this "idea" will somehow cause hammies to accept the deliberate breaking of a rule in order to "uphold" another, is NOT the idea behind amateur radio, and neither is your attitude and verbiage and manner n whcih you address others who do not share your view.. lid.

>unlike cbers who key up over each othr and >jam each other intentionally everday 24-7 _

Really frustrated over two meter, eh? Perhaps if you upgraded the world would not seem against you,,,LOL.

No one said any different. There is a huge difference between use and deliberate interference. See above. Emergency transmissions, whether

>No one said anything about emergency >transmissions, except you changing the topic _

Try to check the deficit and folllow....once again (for your benefit) and for the sake of illustrating the connection and relation to Jerry's topic,
he claimed an "illegal station' has no rights. I cited an exception to the rule, You don't like it, so you claim it's off topic,,,fine,,claim that,,it merely illustrates your communication deficit working overtime, as you fail to make the related connection. JJ made a claim that wasn't true, as he wasn't taking into consideration the emergency angle. It is very pertinent, as it was HIS statement that was untrue. Failure to recognize it is your problem.

>hams participate in emergency situations they

Off topic.

>don't interfere with emergencys,

Not true, You apparetnly are unfamilair with plenty in your world of hammie radio. Recently, a california hammie was thrown in prison not once, but TWICE for deliberate interference to POLICE and emergency frequencies. Why twice? He has your attitude and thought he was above the law and repeated his transgressions after his several warnings. Go smoke yourself.

>you know

>exactly what he is talking about Instead you >try to change the topic to emergency >transmission.

Not at all. In fact, you know very good and well my point is valid and pertinent and it bugs you for some reason (shrug)..that's YOUR problem, not JJ's.

>In fact here is a catch 22 for you tipsy,
_YOU are the catch 22. You pretend to be concerned about your airwaves, but act the jackass online. There is no reason to believe your behavior on air is altered. In fact, reason stands you behave the same manner on air as you do here, after taking all your self-professed claims into consideration.

>if you >can prove an emergency transmission is legal >then JJ wouldn't key up on them and your >point would be invalid , if it is illegal, I am >willing to bet again he doesn't key up and >interfere with an emergency. But since you >said they are allowed that means they are not >Ilelgal then right?

Not at all. If that deficit of yours wasn't working overtime, you would have already read and learned (operative word) that a single legal transmission does not neccessitate and make an illegal station somehow morph to a legal one...I mean,,,gee whiz,,and you call yourself a hammie? LOL...and you couldn't figure that out without 'ol twist...LOL! You have plenty to learn concerning hammie radio. Hey, I know....why not tell us about how much information you forgot again concerning hammie radio,,,,,,it explains plenty of your non-education concerning your foray into the world of hammie radio and communications.

If you don't believe ME, YOU call the FCC. A hammie has no right to interfere with anything. Circumventing the law you are sworn to obey (by virtue of your license) by deliberately tuning up and keying without identifying to cause interference, is illegal.

>(Again twistys keep on topic no where did JJ >say he was not going to identify,

He can not interefere with anything deliberately. I understand you have deficits preventing you from admitting and comprehending such, because you want and need it so badly to be different, but that is the way it is. Deal with it.

>but if he does

>here an unlicensed station and he wants to >call cq or tune up his amp etc he has every >right to do so he is not interfering with a legal

No one is taking issue with such. The topic was deliberate interference,,,you can not do it, no matter what premise you present.

> Anyhow why do you care so much about >what hammies do,

LOL,,why do you care what cbers do?

>I posed the question to you why do you >answer a question with a question now >answer it and I will do like wise.

Fair enough. They (N8wwm, Kc8LDO, N3CVJ, and WA3MOJ) brought their problems to this group (a cb group) and even though they aren't recognized by their peers as hammies, they are hammies, in some far removed sense of the word. This illustrates the caring manner of you lids. Why do you care about cbers? We certainly aren't hurting you or anyone else.
I don;t run amps and I don't intrude on your bands, but between yourself and the rest of the lids, you've attempted to portray untruths concerning myself and many other cbers on this forum. THAT, OM, is NOT what hammie radio is about. It merely illustrates that YOU and YOUR kind are responsible for your own pile f excretement you are forced to frolic in.

>you interfere with stationsevry time you key

>up.

And just how did you arrive at such a grandiose lie? You were buried in this debate once or twice before,,,,,let's do it again.

>well if there are other stations on the same >frequency and you are talking skip you are >interfering with people you don't even know >are out there.

If that were true and presented a problem, ten meter contesting and DX would be illegal.

>Now go wash off because the only pewrson

>who will get buried as usual is you. you >smacked ass

You just were, you're just too deep to see yourself as others do and too personally involved to comprehend your juvenile and incorrect statement concerning HF DX. You really know little about HF propagation and hammie law. Thanks for the post and ascertaining such.

In the first manner, that response was directed toward the lid in this thread,,,not yourself. _
Ok,,let's run with that. Last time I was called on a claim concerning the FCC, I provided not only a contact name at the FCC to confirm my claims, but the telephone number and extension. Not one person took me up on the offer and it ended the thread. Can or will you do the same? "Transmitting" is a broad term, and in the legal sense, "jamming" is a most definite transmission, is it not? Cna you transmit legally over top of illegals? Certainly. Can you intentionally jam them? No, you may not intentionally jam anything at any time. Which brings us back to the circular argument of "prove I was jamming,,which is NOT the spirit of hammie radio, but watching the lids in here freak out, it may be where it is going fast.

Which is why we usually tend to agree on most issues, JJ. It was directed toward the one who inquired why I care about hammies. I have many hammie friends, and according to poor Geogre and my fan club, "I is a hammie" that has had the "wheels in motion" on my illegal ass for the past several years. (yawn)

Have you never heard of the concept of "taking the law into your own hands?"
There are countless convictions of people who have done just that, taken the law into their own hands. Just as it is illegal for you to shoot someone who is walking across your property unless your own life, or the life of someone else, is in danger. Even if you tell him to leave the ONLY thing that you can do is call the police. You may not make him leave forcibly, that's assault. It's the same principle here. Someone is "walking" onto ham frequencies. You may not break the law to make him leave.

Read my post to Frank about taking the law into your own hands. I don't have to call the FCC, I already know. Being a member of the Amateur Auxiliary I've been tested and know this to be true. Causing interference is causing interference, it doesn't matter who is on the receiving end.
Just like it is illegal for someone to interfere with a licensed ham who is breaking the FCC rules. If W5XXX is speaking obscenities or playing music or something like that it is illegal for any other ham to interfere with him to make him stop.

Nope, wrong again. For one thing you are supposed to LISTEN before you "tune up." If there is a signal there you MUST move. Again, ready my post to Frank. Just as you cannot use force to make someone leave your property (unless they are a danger) you cannot use "force" to make someone leave a frequency. It's call taking the law into your own hands.

Yes you are! If you hear someone calling CQ and you hear another station on the same frequency it is against FCC rules to answer his CQ. It is very likely that the station calling CQ does not hear the other station, it does happen quite often. But if you hear the station with the QSO in progress, legal or otherwise, it is illegal for you to answer the CQ and cause interference to the other QSO in progress. That is WILLFULLY causing interference and is a violation.

That "bottom line" will seriously impact your "bottom line" if you are caught by the FCC. Remember the law says "Any communication or signal." It does not say "any legal communication or signal." You cannot imply that the law/rule means legal station.

But the FCC isn't sitting in your shack, waiting to monitor your transmissions, so who's to say if you heard the illegal station or not before transmitting? :)

-Keyclowns get their kicks by spoiling other people's enjoyment of CB so we are spoiling their enjoyment of breaking the law. We are spoiling the enjoyment of people who are spoiling people's enjoyment.

-Guys like Jerry O and Leland Scott get trolled because they mention enforcement or legalities, yet Brainblusterless utters not a peep about their harassment.

-Your rrcb "humour" site that you promote taunts pro legal people by calling them gay.

-You are trolling like mad, name calling, and shit slinging with the

Again, you missed the point. Interfering with an illegal transmission isn't illegal. Everyone in this thread seems to like analogies, so here's one that's closer to the reality of the situation: Some unwelcome stranger walks into your abode and makes himself comfortable. Do you 1) make him leave, or 2) live somewhere else so as not to interrupt his domestic bliss?

Now if you are hung up on the word "any", then you MUST include any transmission whether you hear it or not. If you have been a ham any length of time you already know that it's easy to interfere with a station that you can't hear. You might think this is nit-picking, but notice that the rule doesn't make any distinction between intentional and unintentional interference. So how do you prevent yourself from interfering with ANY transmission and still exercise your right to use the band? You can't! If you think that is an extreme interpretation of the law, you are absolutely right.

And as for the illegal station, do you think that he is going to file a complaint against a ham that is interfering with his transmissions in the ham band? Only if he REALLY dumb! And that's what you have to be if you think that the law protects illegal transmissions on the ham bands from interference caused by hams.

You still don't get it, do you? When you get a Notice of Violation, that's it. You're busted. No second chance. Either come up with proof that they are wrong, or get another mortgage and learn to darn your socks while you wait for your NAL to come in the mail. Here's a good example:

http://www.fcc.gov/eb/Orders/da001551.html

Notice the chronology here: First comes the warning letter, then the NOV, then the NAL, then the forfeiture order. Ignore that last one and the case is sent to the DOJ for collection.

Of course they don't. But they do include enough information to show due process, including the requirement of fair warning. In the eyes of the FCC, holding an amateur license is sufficient to meet that requirement when the violation is of amateur rules. And the vast majority of cases reflect that.

>Along with the warning notices being deleted from your "official FCC

Well, I'll tell ya what, Twist: you find a case where an unlicensed individual was slapped with an NAL or NOV, and where the device does not indicate that the violator received a warning. You can't because it doesn't exist.

Well, I'll tell you anyway: Because the world is constantly changing, Twist. Not only is technology getting better, but the uses for that technology are expanding at a similar rate. Law enforcement has been using the internet for quite a while now, and with different methods for different crimes. For example, remember those kiddie-porn busts last year? Or maybe the chat-room stings for child stalkers? Even the FCC uses the internet, like they did to pop L.D. Brewer (somebody right in your own neighborhood) for selling illegal FM broadcast transmitters. The criminals gloat at their own creativity when they think of sneaky ways to use the internet for their crimes, but little do they know that the minds in law enforcement are just as creative. So regarding the use of the internet by law enforcement, if you can think of something that will work, chances are that they are already doing it.

Oh really? Read the snippet below.

"PART 97--AMATEUR RADIO SERVICE-- Subpart B--Station Operation Standards

Sec. 97.101 General standards.

(d) No amateur operator shall willfully or maliciously interfere with or cause interference to any radio communication or signal."

You'll note it says "ANY RADIO COMMUNICATION", not "any LEGAL radio

What's that got to do with the topic at hand? In any case, the Army uses HF radios quite frequently.

Any licensed ham who transmitts over an illegal signal is not breaking the

That is illegal as far as the content of the transmission, not illegal as far as not being licensed to use the frequency. Different apples. In this case you can legally communicate with the offending station to encourage him to cease the illegal content of his transmission.

And to respond to another of your posts, the FCC is not going to take action against any ham who transmitts over an illegal signal. I spoke to the FCC about this some years ago when all the illegals started appearing on the 10 meter band. I was told by the person I spoke with that the FCC "DOES NOT" consider it interferene for any ham to transmit over these illegal signals. So stop yapping about how a ham will loose his license for transmitting over these illegal intruders on the 10 meter or any other band, it ain't going to happen. As long as the ham is using legal procedures he is not breaking any FCC rule by transmitting over an illegal signal, the ham has a right to be there, the illegal signal does not....period.

And to answer Twistie question, no I do not remember the name of the person I talked to but it was with someone at the FCC monitering station in Maryland. It was several years ago.

You are wrong. Read the below snippet, which I'm posting again...

TITLE 47--TELECOMMUNICATION

COMMISSION (CONTINUED)

PART 97--AMATEUR RADIO SERVICE--Table of Contents - Subpart B--Station Operation Standards

Sec. 97.101 General standards.

(d) No amateur operator shall willfully or maliciously interfere with or cause interference to any radio communication or signal.

You'll note it does NOT say "any LEGAL radio communication".

I'm of course assuming we're talking about illegal transmissions on ham bands
(what else would we be talking about on a CB newsgroup!? ;)

Nope, wrong again. For one thing you are supposed to LISTEN before you "tune up." If there is a signal there you MUST move. Again, ready my post to Frank. Just as you cannot use force to make someone leave your property (unless they are a danger) you cannot use "force" to make someone leave a frequency. It's call taking the law into your own hands.

'Lo Andy. Heck, the FCC don't have to be in your shack, they just need confirm the transmissions. One manner that has been undertaken successfully, is when a hammie is pissed at someone they know operates illegally and they take appropriate measures, especially if it merits repeat occurrences......example: W1ASS is tired of the splash from an unlicensed op so he sits and monitors the cb, freeband or even the ten meter band for unauthorized users, truckers,,,whatever you may have. W1ASS then joins the fracas with tones, dits and dahs, roger beeps, music, whatever. Only a third party, possibly an Official ARRL observer, is now involved, and he/she has been recording and keeping track of W1ASS' antics. That pendulum has a wicked double-edge.

Yes, we do need a licence for a TV. Although it is to fund the BBC, it is still needed if you only use it to watch Satelite TV (for which you pay again). They say that a licence is even needed to use a TV for games such as a Playstation or X-Box.
The licence covers all members of a family in that house. The rule for TV use away from home is that the licence covers use of battery operated equipment with an internal antenna. I have yet to see one with an internal antenna - they are all telescopic, so external of the case.
A while back, they were going after truckers, who had a licence for their home, but needed one for for using a TV in the truck. More recently they are after people such as students, who may use one away from home.
With CB licensing, they have never gone out to get those without a licence... the costs would outweight any revenue gained. They just add it to the offences if a person is checked or busted for some other reason. They have never gone looking for people to "bust", they are (and always have been) under-funded.
The CB licence is due to be removed soon, so we will have a free CB service.
The incredibly small number of people who are busted will relate to those who have left the RA with no other choice, and a clear case in court. First of all, someone would need to be reported for interference to other equipment. These reported people would then get a visit and, if illegal equipment is found or they are unlicensed, may get illegal equipment (such as USA CBs) snatched, and a warning.
The 20 to 30 "busts" per year will be those who are persistant despite warnings and snatched equipment - where the RA can be sure of success in court.
Regards,
Peter.

See? Consider yourself semi-schooled in the matter, now. You have been arguing with me telling me the warning wasn't necessary. No matter WHAT form it comes in, you admit in exists.

>In

>the eyes of the FCC, holding an amateur >license is sufficient to meet that requirement

And you have managed to totally eliminate the original debate concerning enforcement in a cb group and tailor it to amateurs only. Note how you eliminated the cber. You're wrong, Frank.
In regards to the rest of your need for insultive posts:

1) I used no "excuse" to avoid your link, Frank. You are owed no explanation. Interpret it any way you please.

2) A notice of violation does NOT necessitate a fine or action merely via guilt. Ask N8WWM, our favorite repeater jammer.

3) I never said the FCC was wrong, Frank. I said you were wrong, and you are in the manner in which you misinterpret their operations and data.

4) Mr. Martin's "bust" resulted in his refusal to inspect his station. The commission makes it's decisions based on, among other things, considerations taken into account for cooperation. They even state "No action may be forthcoming",,,in other words, their total discretion when it comes to actions. A warning like N8WWM received for jamming repeaters and breaking the law is not considered an enforcement action by most,,it is taken for what it is,,,,a warning. Reading things that aren't there plague the shit outta the angry hammies on this group.

Right, dickbreath. You cant set up a deliberate jamming operation on any freq.

BUT if the unlicensed keyclown is there and you transmit your cq on top of him, how do you know he is being interfered with? You arent legally allowed to talk to the keyclown so you cant find out if you are causing him interference. You cant ask him to move either. You can't legally communicate with him at all. So if you need to use that freq. for a cq or a Qso then you use it, irregardless of a keyclown being there or not.

Oh ya Twithed: get that FUGGLY kid some makeover help.

Oh so you care only about the innocent people getting thier name smeared, then you should care about wa3moj, everytime you use his name.

Yawn, I post from this same exact isp every single post I make to this NG they all come from comcast, you and your delusinal bunch can smell my ass if you think otherwsie, nothing will make you fell otherwise, just as nothing you say will ever change my mind that you are a flaming asshole.

You are truely a hypocrite, you have no idea who I am or if I have cronies yet you sit there and accuse and hurl accusations LOL at least it is funny I laugh so hard when you call me george and say your not in rochester.

I never said he was. Once again, he claimed an illegal station has no rights, which was wrong. I illustrated an exception of his claim.

LOL you said anyone can key up on any frequency in an emergency correct? so this would not make them an illegal station, because in your own words there is a FCC law regarding this hence if there is a law allowing this then they are not Illegal so why did you need to change the topic? I know an attempt to confuse and obfuscate.
So again you show you know nothing abou FCC laws or rules you stand corrected.

He's afraid that Frankie won't follow the "party line" to the letter, doncha know.

And we all know who the TROLLs are: Georgie-girl Busch WA3MOJ, DouGay Adairierre N8WWM, and Frankie-fag Gilliland (who seems incapable of obtaining a ham license).

An old folk saying is: "If you lie down with dogs, you wake up with fleas." A more modern version is: "You are known by the company you keep." Georgie is an alleged Extra class amateur, yet he spends 24/7 trolling an escoteric CB newsgroup and he cohorts are a known repeater jammer and pervert, DouGay Adairierre N8WWM. What does this tell ya about Georgie?

Sure thing, Georgie-girl. As soon as > you < do.

You are known by the company you keep, Georgie. Maybe you should associate with some real amateurs instead of a known pervert and repeater jammer for a change?

To all that replied......Thanks for your help. Here is where I am now.....
The 1 inch wire from the negative power connector to the pcb board was not passing the negative connection. I wired in a new jumper. Now when I put the bench power supply on it, I only get less than 1 volt on the meter. Unplug it from the radio, and it jumps back up to normal. So I suspect that diode got fried as well as the wire.I will try and get the diode replaced as soon as I can get one, and will let you all know how it came out. So all of you have been a great help. My one question for now is... If I remove that " suspect " diode, without replacing it, should the radio power up? or do I need to wait until I replace it before I put the power back on it?
Thanks again to all!!!

Muenzler, you don't have a clue. I most certainly can answer the station calling cq and assuming the other station is a legal station, I will ask the station calling cq to move up or down to a clear frequency and give me a call. It is perfectly legal. Now if we establish our communication on top of the other legal station, and cause interference to that station, that would be illegal.

Not true, if the stations with the qso in progress are not legal, they have no rights on the frequency, the legal station calling cq and I can establish contact on that frequency and we are perfectly legal. If it causes interference to the illegal stations, it is tough, in fact, the other ham station and I have a right to complain because the illegal stations are causing illegal interference to our qso, and if the FCC should monitor such communications, they would do absolutely nothing to the legal stations, if any action were to be taken it would be against the illegal stations. How did you ever get a license?

The FCC rule is clear, with no room for interpretation: "No amateur operator shall willfully or maliciously interfere with or cause interference to any radio communication or signal."

It doesn't say "any LEGAL radio..". I just says "any radio". Period. There's no arguing with the published rules.

The whole point is the keyclowns who admit to freebanding and breaking FCC rules are trying to tell a ham he cannot tune up or call cq on a frequency that thier is an illegal station transmitting on.

Where does it say that? My copy of Part 97 says "ANY communication or signal." What does YOURS say? Do you even have one to read?

They why doesn't it expressly say "Legal signal?" There are other sections that expressly forbid communication with illegal signals. If 97.101d only applied to "legal signals" it would say "legal signals."

Nope, you are wrong again. Remember 97.101d doesn't distinguish between legal and illegal signals. W5XXX's communications/signals would be illegal ones even though HE is licensed. The difference between W5XXX and the unlicensed individual is the license, both are illegal.

Says who? Please site the statute. I have sited the FCC rule that says "any communication or signal." Please site your statute, or court precedent, that supports your opinion (which is all you have, an opinion) that Part 97.101d only applies to LEGAL signals.

I'll ask you the same question I asked Frank. Says who? Please site the statute, rule, regulation or court precedent to support your opinion. I have produced the actual FCC rule. Part 97.101d which forbids interference to "any communication or signal." Until you can produce such a document all you have is an opinion which doesn't mean squat in court against a written statute.

Call the FCC, they will confirm what I say. They will never cite a ham for communicating over an illegal signal on the ham bands, so there won't be a court case. As I said before, you don't have a clue.

So if by virtue of W5XXX transmitting obscenities or playing music makes his transmissions illegal then you are saying that you or I as licensed hams cannot establish contact with him? You mean I cannot contact him to request he stop his use of obscenities or playing music?

You should have stayed at the gate just a bit longer, because if causing interference was illegal ...."period".... it would be illegal to transmit any signal at all. If interference occurs even with legal transmissions, and it does, then to transmit knowing that it could be causing ANY interference is a willful act, and therefore illegal.

The radio will power up, but unless you replace it, and put a fuse connecter on the power lead, you will have lost your reverse-voltage protection.

You better write the charter first, and then who's gonna submit it?

That name will doom your purpose.

...CERTAIN CONDITIONS ARE MET.

Keyclowns must build a small shine and decidcate it to N8. The shrine must be EXACTLY 10 FEET 3 INCHES in height and be made from PRE-1990 dollar bills glued together with nontoxic glue. On top must be a hand letered sign written in GOLD ink that reads N8 IS OUR GOD WE WORSHIP THE GROUND HE WALKS ON. Take a picture of the shrine and post it here. Then you can talk about amps and AKC will not bother you.

Shame on you, if your going to quote text at least follow the thread. My response was to Bessel Null, not Steve.
===

Sorry, my mistake.
But, the question still stands...

If someone is getting messages from their Firewall, why should they switch off the firewall?
Surely, the Firewall is just telling you what is happening... don't shoot the messenger.

If the firewall is switched off, itshould be clear what will happen... even to someone like Georgina. Hackers will have a clear run at it.

I went through a few days of seriously heavy pinging and Netbios attempts, all from the same place, about a week back. Although I have a dynamic IP, it was happening within less than a minute of connecting, and continuing while connected. They must have been targetting the range of IPs that my usual ISP uses... it didn't happen with my other ISP.

Hi.

The bulbs used in such radios may be either 6 or 12 volts. 6 Volt types are connected as pairs in series. These bulbs are also used in car stereos here in the UK, and are easily found in electronic component stores here. You could try such shops, but be aware that the bulb length should not be too great... some are longer than others.
I find it hard to believe that, if it is a faulty bulb, a shop cannot get one anywhere.

Regards,

Peter.

Like the snippet I posted says, it doesn't specify that a ham must not cause intentional interference on LEGAL radio communications, it only says that they must not cause intentional interference on any "radio communications". If they had wanted to exclude illegal communications, I'm sure they would have shoved that one 5 letter word in there, but they didn't.

I doubt they would have did you see what year the FCC communications act was formed? There was little if any freebanders, pirates etc when this was

You assclowns crack me up, If a illegal operator is using say 20 meters, and I wish to communicate, I can key up and call cq etc over top of that person, it is not called interference it is called communication. Now if the amatuer keyed up and played music that is interference. But to key up call cq , tune up etc is not interference to a station that has no right being there. And who is to say I can hear the station I am keying up over, you guys are really arguing a moot point as you said vhf who can prove you heard the illegal signal and were trying to intrfere with it if you call cq etc etc etc ...

"ALLOW"? You can't do a thing about it, DouGay; you haven't prevented anything and you can't "allow" anything. You are a pathetic, cringing milksop, hiding behind your computer keyboard like the coward you are.

47CFR, which is where Part 97 is contained, was revised in October 2002. Plenty of pirate radio operators then.

I do think it's a little silly, the way some guys compare Part 97 with criminal or even traffic law. Quite amuzing.

As long as you "didn't hear" that illegal station, you're not causing "intentional interference". :)

>But to key up call cq , tune

Unless you "hear" them, then you're interfering with a "radio communication", which is illegal under Part 97. But then again, no one ever hears the illegal stations transmitting on the air, do we? :)

Well you see, Andy, you once said that the freeband from 27.41 to 28.00 MHz wasn't being used by anyone. After I informed you that the military uses those freqs, you replied that you had been in the Army for 7 1/2 years and "never once saw a radio in use below 30mhz". So which is it -- do they use them or not? And if they use them, how do you know that they are not used on the freeband (in which they have an allocation)?

BTW, this is -very- relevant to the topic, as you will soon see.

If the intent of the law is to include interference to illegal transmissions, provide just one case where such a violation was enforced. Just one.

I never saw a radio in use below 30mhz when I was in the Army. I've also never had a $1000 bill, but I know they exist. We only did local radio stuff, nothing for overseas or over long distances. In the hummers, we had radios that worked 30-72mhz, and when I was on the road, it varied from post to post, but I used VHF, UHF-Trunked and UHF-Digital.

As long as it's just two hams talking to each other, over the illegal operator, I'm sure the FCC wouldn't care. If the hams start playing music and taunting the illegal op, then they're treading on thin ice.

I'll make a guess as I haven't talked to Doug in a while. But I am guessing this is Doug, and if so, he did meet with Chuck at Findlay a little over a year ago, in fact Leland was standing talking to Chuck when chuck saw my callsign and started talking to me, then Doug joined in the conversation, there was just a tiny bit of trashtalking, but mostly it was a very civil conversation by all parties present.

Bad English...

"... to keep a idiot busy..."

You should know better... Fix your mistake!

trying to do anything about us. You bark on command, puppetfag.
Assclown. Queerboy. Controlled toy.

You exist for the amusement of the AKC and nothing else.

Cranus the dick sucker may not live in rochester, could be in a burb.
His momma lives in Webster, NY. On Drumm Rd. She has a big ass rubber black cock and a tube of KY jelly in the top left dresser drawer. She has a book on dogsex in her nightstand drawer. She owns an American

However they are selling quite well in the REAL WORLD. Ever hear of that? That is when you leave your stinking smelly room that your mommy rents to you and go outside into the fresh air and see sunlight.
LOL!!! Get out of your room every once in a while and stop sitting in that smelly room typing messages every 2 hours. By the way, three yes
(3) amps were sold today. A 5 pill an 8 pill and a big ole 12 pill.
Why come here for that? Isn't entertainment from the anti keydowners enough?

Could you be more specific, Frankie? Like more precisely > what < frequencies they > use < ? There may be "allocations", but the military doesn't use 11 meters any more than FEMA does (although they have allocations there, too).

Frequencies > allocated < are quite different from frequencies > used <, in case you haven't noticed. Care to elucidate?

Fact is, NOBODY uses 11 meter "allocations" these days because they have BETTER means of communication (satellite, etc.). So your point is moot (and outdated).

Because they don't. Period. Neither does FEMA, although they also have allocations there. They have better methods of communication than fighting with illegal hams and CBers.

Amateur Radio Newsline™ Report 1365 – October 10 2003

Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1365 with a release date of Friday, October 10th 2003 to follow in 5-4-3-2-1.

The following is a Q-S-T.

Deciding the future of ham radio was not an easy task in Geneva and the problem of Broadband over Powelines continues to grow world-wide. Find out the details on Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1365 coming your way right now.

IARU: HOW RADIO REVISIONS CAME TO PASS

The word is out. Some of those who attended last springs World Radiocommunications Conference in Geneva Switzerland are now saying it was not all that easy to reach decisions. Q-News Graham Kemp, VK4BB, has the rest of the story:

Just now some of the background work done at WRC-03 is coming to light. The work was intensive. The main conference hall had over 1500 seats, simultaneous translation in 7 languages often more than 10 meetings going on at the same time, distributed in three adjacent buildings.

Some meetings went on till the wee hours of the morning and resumed at the usual time the next morning!

The growing number of completely new radio services clamouring for spectrum allocation, such as for example space borne radars for terrestrial observation, high altitude platforms together with the ever increasing number of new ITU Member States with active participation made the deliberations that much more difficult.

For Q-News Australia, I’m Graham Kemp. VK4BB, reporting for the Amateur Radio Newsline.

It was the decisions made at this conference that lead some nations to abandon C-W testing of radio amateurs and also spur the ongoing, world-wide Morse code debate. (Q-News)

RADIO LAW: BPL BECOMMING A HOT ISSUE WORLD-WIDE

Meantime, down here in Kiwi-Land as well as around the world, the debate is heating up over Broadband Over Powerline or BPL as its called in North America. This is the technology that claims to provide broadband high-speed Internet services using domestic power lines for system wide transmission and Internet connectivity.

For those not aware, BPL works by injecting the data signal into the powerline near the electricic substation and it travels along the line to the user. In some proposed systems, it interconnects cities using existing long distance power distribution grids.

The problem, of course, is that powerlines are not radio frequency cables. They are not shielded and leak RF energy causing a level of wideband noise in the vicinity of the cable. And as tests conducted by the ARRL have graphically proven, powerlines radiate for long distances.

AC powerlines are a very noisy transmission medium, with spikes and other noise. To make it work, BPL operators have to use higher injection powers to get their data signals to propagate along the cable. Higher injection power mean higher emissions, and this is bad news for all High Frequency radio operators.

By way of example, current proposals in Europe would raise the level of the background noise level on H-F by some 60-70 dB within 3 meters of the cable. Further away, the rise would be less, but still considerable.

Because of this, Broadband Over Powerlines poses a threat not only to amateur radio. Users of many low power devices such as security systems that tag products in shops are very concerned. And High Frequency broadcasters world-wide are fighting to support sensible emission limits for powerline breoadband communications.

But that’s not where it ends. In many places security services are worried. Unfortunately, in some countries, government departments involved in security have been told to not object to BPL as the government policy is to support it.

Civil Aviation communication and aero-navigation can be threatened by BPL. There are reports of an air accident in Canada being directly attributable to interference from broadband cable systems.

And this is only the beginning. New plans for BPL will attempt to use much higher frequencies which could immediately pose a threat to some nations emergency service communications. This is an extremely serious issue for amateur radio world-wide and for other users of the High Frequency spectrum as well. (NZART)

RADIO AIDS: NOAA PROPAGATION SERVICE TO GO QRT

Amateurs around the globe may soon loose the propagation information system operated by the United States National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. This includes real time data on the state of the interaction of the earth's magnetosphere with the solar wind and state of the earth's magnetic field.

These tools have been invaluable to ham radio operators world-wide for many years. The reasons it may be going away? Budgetary cutbacks and lack of future funding. (Published news reports)

ENFORCENMENT: HAM REPEATERS ARE NOT FOR BUSINESS

Back in the United States, the FCC has written to a Lakewood New Jersey to ask him why a repeater bearing his his call sign is being used as an adjunct to a business band radio system. The FCC’s Daryl Duckworth, NN0W explains:

Duckworth: “Martin Gross, N2DCG, of Lakewod New Jersey, has 20 days to reply to an inquirey about a repeater on 448.825/443.825 MHz and is used as an adjunct to WNVF 627, a business radio system for the Hatzolah Emergency Medical Services, rather than for Amateur Radio purposes as set forth in Section 97.1 of the Commission’s rules.”

--

In a September 11th letter, the FCC notes that Gross’s repeater is not coordinated. (FCC)

AT THE FCC: THE FCC's MASTER SEARCH ENGINE

The CGC Communicator reports that there is an obscure but very important search engine at the FCC website. One that allows you to comb through most of the Commission's licensing systems for specific information.

According to CGC, member databases include Universal Licensing System, Experimental, Cable Operations, Mass Media and International Bureau. Queries can be set up by frequency range, state, county, location call sign and licensee name. RADIO LAW: CABLE TOLD TO SOLVE ITS OWN PROBLEMS

FCC Chairman Michael Powell has told the cable industry that it needs to work out its own problems before appealing to regulators for remedies. At a recent appearance at the annual cable sector conference Powell highlighted issues that have driven a wedge between cable companies and local broadcasters. Specifically, the rules that dictate what over the air channels cable outlets must carry on their systems.

Currently, cable companies are required by law to carry local broadcast channels. But broadcasters are also hoping regulators will eventually force cable companies to carry both digital and analog signals during the broadcasters' transition period to all digital transmission. But cable companies argue that if they were forced to carry both a broadcaster's regular analog signal and digital signals, it would significantly deplete their capacity to air other channels. RESCUE RADIO: ORGANIZING 60 METERS IN VA

Bringing emergency communications to 60 meters is the theme of a new net organized by Virginia RACES, Inc. This, by providing a twice monthly opportunity for equipment tests in the new spectrum asllocation.

The Mid-Atlantic Emergency Net began opeeration on October 1st. It now takes place the first and third Wednesdays of every month at 2000 hours Eastern Time on 5330.5 using upper sideband.

All ARES, RACES and other emergency communications organizations within reliable communication range of the net are encouraged to participate. Liaisons are also invited with similar groups in neighboring states. (Via e-mail)

GETTING YOUR E-MAIL: AOL BLOCKS QRZ.COM

If you use America Online as an internet service provider and are waiting for e-mail or a password from QRZ.com, this is for you. A-O-L has decided to unilaterally block delivery QRZ.com e-mails unless a specific A-O-L user goes to the trouble of unblocking his or her own account.

According to QRZ, they have been getting up to 50 emails a week from America Online users who have not received their QRZ passwords or Links. QRZ advises that it is A-O-L and not them that has placed spam filters on incoming e-mail. To fix the problem, users must log onto A-O-L, go to “SPAM CONTROL” and set it so that e-mail from QRZ.com as an allowable e-mail address.

QRZ adds that it has no other way of sending America Online users a password or log on information as A-O-L has QRZ e-mail filtered out. (qrz.com)

HAMVENTION 2004: YOUR IDEAS ARE SOLICITED

Turning to the convention scene, the planners of Hamvention 2004 are putting out a call to the world-wide ham radio community. They say give us your input and we will listen.

According to the Hamvention website, those in charge of next years gathering have implemented what they call a new "open door policy.” In other words, they want to hear your suggestions or comments on how to improve their show. They also promise to consider your ideas, discuss them, and implement them if possible.

If you want to help make Hamvention even bigger and better, now’s your chance. Sit down at your keyboard and write the 2004 Hamvention team directly at w-mail to info@hamvention.org. And yes, they promise a personal response to every e-note that’s received. (Hamvention)

PROMOTING HAM RADIO: JOTA VIDEO NEEDED

Are if you are planning to take part in this years scouting Jamboree on the Air and own a good quality home video camera, your help is needed. As you know,

Dave Bell W6AQ, Alan Kaul W6RCL and Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF, are always looking for good video of ham radio happenings that they might be able to incorporate into a presentation about the hobby. As scouting and ham radio enjoy a very unique relationship, this is an event that is sure to make it into one of their shows, but only if they have the pictures and sound.

Since the Jamboree on the Air happens only once a year, that's where you come in. What's needed are volunteer camera people to take their gear to where the scouts are holding their JOTA gatherings and videotape them in action. Pictures and sound of them setting up their JOTA campsites, ham stations and their on-the-air operations. Also wanted is video of licensed scout hams introducing non-ham scouts to our very special new world of Amateur Radio.

If you can help in this project, or want more information, e-mail the production team to hamvideo@juno.com. (The Producers)

CHANGING OF THE GUARD: DANNY WEIL, EX-VP2VP - S.K.

The changing of the guard in ham radio continues. This with word from the San Antonio Radio Club that Danny Weil, the former VP2VP, has passed away October 3rd at age 86.

Weil is best known for his post World War 2 DX operations. During the 1950's and 1960's Weil took to the ham radio airwaves from numerous exotic locations that he sailed to in a boat named the YASME.

Born in the UK in 1918, Weil had been living in a managed care facility in Texas since suffering a stroke in 2001. But during his lifetime his voyages lead to the setting up ham radio stations on remote islands around the world and contacts with over 100,000 amateur radio enthusiasts. His exploits are credited with giving birth to the terms D-X'er and D-Xpedition.

Weil's adventures and those of the Colvin's -- Lloyd W6KG-and Iris W6QL -- lead to the formation of the famed YASME Foundation that assists DX operations world wide. Services for Weil were held in San Antonio Texas on Wednesday, October 8th.

More about the life and death of Danny Weil is on-liner at http://obit.porterloring.com/obit_display.cgi?id=82269&clientid=porterloring (San Antonio Radio Club, Paul Guido)

RADIO TRAGEDY: HAM KILLED TRYING TO ACTIVATE DX STATION

A ham radio operator has died while trying to put a rare location on the air. RSGB News Reader Jeramy Boot, G4NJH, has the tragic details:

We are sad to have to report the death of Richard Baker, M3RWB, who died as the result of injuries sustained while climbing Aran Fawddwy in North Wales. He was intending to activate the summit for the Summits on the Air, or SOTA, award programme.

The Summits on the Air management team has released a statement which says, "Richard was an experienced hillwalker who saw SOTA as a good opportunity to re-ascend many summits that he had climbed in the past. His death is an untimely reminder that while accidents can happen anywhere, the mountains can present special dangers to those who are experienced as well as those new to mountain travel."

The Summits on the Air management team went on to stress that in all cases, the safety of those travelling must come above the desire to ascend to the mountain. (GB2RSO)

RADIO RECORDS: US TO CZECH REPUBLIC ON 24 GHZ

Shooting for the moon has provided two hams the first-ever United States to Czech Republic E-M-E contact on 24-Ghz. The ARRL Letter reports that Amateur Radio moonbounce and microwave history was made September 24 at 1400 U-T-C when Josef Sveceny, OK1UWA, and Al Ward, W5LUA, completed the 24-GHz EME QSO between the two nations.

Sveceny used a 3-meter Prime Focus dish with 35 watts at the feed, vertically polarized. Ward’s station also utilized a 3-meter Prime Focus dish with but with 70 Watts at the feed. Ward was horizontally polarized to account for the spatial offset between North America and Europe. Previous international 24 GHz EME QSO’s have taken place between the US and Canada, the US and Russia and Canada and Russia. (ARRL)

DX

In DX, ZL3CW will be active as ZM8CW from Raoul Island in the Kermadecs through the 18th of October. Jack says that he will be there doing maintenance work for the Department of Conservation and hopes to be active in his spare time. This is actually not a DXpedition, but ZL3CW is considered to be one of the better Morse operators and enjoys the challenge of the pile-ups. (Modern DX’er)

And a D-Xpadition to Annobon Island was forced to shut down prematurely. This after authorities ordered operations curtailed on October 4th local time. According to the various D-X remailers, no reason was given for ordering the 3CZ0V ham radio operation off the air. (Via Internet)

THAT FINAL ITEM: HAM RADIO AT THE NYC MARATHON

For this weeks final story we turn the ham radio sports page and one of the biggest events of the year thats about to take place. And its Amateur Radio that makes it happen. We have the details in this report:

If you want to see a shining example of how valuable amateur radio can be as a public service, look no further than New York City the first week in November. Providing communications for the marathon is no small job. Just ask Communications Director Steve Mendelsohn, W2ML. When the marathon was run back in 1976, 26 hams provided communications assistance. This year, 425 hams will help, and they'll do it using 9 repeaters on 2 meters and 440. Mendelson says it's a source of pride for the ham volunteers who come from across the country:
--
Mendelsohn: “Just like Disney's fantasy land, once you hav e been there you want to come back over, over and over again.”
--

The marathon isn't just for New York area hams. Mendelsohn says amateur radio operators show up from more than half a dozen states to help:

--
Mendelsohn: “We have people coming back from Colorado, coming back from Vermont, from florida. They come in from all over. Seven states, twenty-six miles, no waiting.”
--

New York's boroughs will be flooded with over 30-thousand runners this year. The hams helping will be part of more than 9-thousand people volunteering. How you manage that many people could be a massive challenge -- but Mendelsohn says race organizers figured out how to do it:

Mendelsohn: “You break the nets up into sizable chunks. You name a Mile Captain for each of the miles, and the Mile Captain manages a staff of anywhere from 3 to 15 people. Oncve you get further along in the race where there is more of a chance of the runners falling and dropping out because thery are tired, you increase your manpower.”

18 net controllers with 2 standby operators will be on duty. Communications start at 3 a.m. race day and go until 6 o'clock that evening. 35 hams will be on hand at the starting line alone. Once the race is done, Mendelsohn says the hams' work doesn't end. For this many runners and their family members to reunite takes up an area of more than five blocks.

Hams help there, too. And they'll tag along not just with race organizers, but with translators who will need amateur radio operators by their side, too. It's a huge undertaking that takes a lot of planning and makes for a very long day. But the hams helping out with New York City's marathon wouldn't trade it, because Mendelsohn says, it's just plain fun.

From Birmingham Alabama, I’m David Black, KB4KCH, for the Amateur Radio Newsline.

For those of you in North America who might want to grab a glimpse of ham radio in action, NBC Sports will broadcast a one hour New York City Marathon highlights show nationwide beginning at 2:00 p.m. EST on November 2nd. Check your local listings for details.

Who gives a fuck about buying an amp at rec.radio.cb? There's plenty of supply, and less demand.

Besides the fact that amp auctions make you piss yourself.

or get an old 486 machine, with a floppy drive and cd drive (no HD), have the boot commands on the floppy and the OS (Linux) on the CD, use this as a firewall/router. no HD to hack/write to.

Routers require much less electricity to use than the boatanchor method above, and can handle more connections on the internal network.

Here's the steps, in order:

Take 65 corvair. Remove engine. Cap Diff. Put new clutch and plate on front of tranny. Remove back seats. Cut hole in floorpan. Install rollcage and crossmember. Lovingly slide LT1 into place where back seats used to be. Bolt to tranny and motor mounts. Hookup wiring. Install radiator under "hood" and run piping. Replace all fluids. Testfire motor. Install 50's series tires on rear axle. Install 60's series tires on front axle. Install trunk where old engine compartment used to be. Paint corvair metallic burgundy. Stencil "Nader's Nightmare" on both rear quarterfenders in bright fire engine yellow. Watch Steveo's countenance drop when he realizes his Hemi is no match.

The router is also a)more expensive and b)not nearly as flexible.

Somewhere.. I'll have to dig through my old stuff and scan them in.. it's been nearly 15 years since I did that.. If I run across 'em, I'll be sure to get it done.

What you see in your networks doesn't show what ports you have open.
Find a copy of nmap, or go to tucows and look for a port scanner. You might be shocked how many ports you have open. By the way, port scanning isn't illegal, unless you try to use what you find out.

And not nearly as reliable as the $60 router listed in the link. Like a 486 sx/dx machine is really flexible now days? Sheesh! Well, they do make good doorstops. Sure, IF you happen to have an old machine laying around, and have enough old ISA cards lying around, it's OK, but still not a good choice for broadband.

After fixing the negative wire and replacing the diode, the radio powers up just fine. I'll find out Monday when Ronnie puts it back in his truck if it works like it used to. Thanks especially to the both of you, because you both were dead on in what you suggested. If I missed thanking anyone else, I apoligize. Total cost of repair excluding my time is 59 cents for the diode and $3 for an inline blade fuse holder. I think I'll just let Ronnie buy me lunch......
Have a great day.....

check out the local government offices and schools, around here every year they completely upgrade their systems, you can buy their old systems for $5.00 sometimes, they may not be the latest pentium class but they will be fast enough to do the job for broadband, I just got 5 PII machines last spring for less than $80.00 they already had the network cards and everything all I had to do was change the OS for my purposes.

Hit the history books again.. He finally got the Corvair killed in 1969. He also got quite a few other good products killed... Well, they were good after the bugs were worked out of them. The original Corvairs (60-64) had only one U-joint on each rear halfshaft, and the draglinks tended to buckle under high-speed turns, so the axles would fold under, causing the car to roll. People were hurt. GM fixed the problem with the 1965 model, but Nader still persisted and got it killed.

Guess that shows what you know about firewalling and networking. My

F.C.C. Ruling Could Allow Use Of "F-word" On T.V.
By Jon Hanian BOISE -

In broadcasting, dropping the so called "F-bomb" goes over like an H-bomb. But the FCC has now ruled that the use of the "F-word" by U-2 frontman "Bono" at the Golden Globe awards did not violate federal indecency rules.

The FCC rules say the use of the word must be "patently offensive" to be considered indecent. But the FCC ruled that when Bono received a Golden Globe award on television and said, "this is really f * * * * * * brilliant," he did not violate FCC rules. They ruled that the word was used as an adjective instead of a verb and therefore, while it may have been crude, it was not "patently offensive."

If that FCC decision confuses you, think about how those of us in the media are trying to to interpret it.

Dr. Rick Moore of the Boise State University Communications Department believes this decision will muddy the already muddy waters for broadcasters who struggle with what is acceptable and unacceptable speech. "I think it might give some people a sense of greater license to not be quite so tight on that bleep button as they have been in the past," said Moore.

At Idaho 2 News, General Manager Jeff Anderson says while the ruling may make an already murky situation murkier, KBCI TV will not air the F-word in any context. "We have an obligation to program in the public interest, and in my opinion broadcasting programming with that kind of language is inappropriate and we won't do it," he said.

FCC relaxes TV rules on use of f-word
By Chris Baker
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Remember comedian George Carlin's list of the seven dirty words you can't say on television?

It just got a little shorter.

The Federal Communications Commission ruled this month that Irish rocker Bono did not violate federal indecency rules when he used the f-word during an acceptance speech at the Golden Globe Awards, which NBC broadcast in January.

"This is really, really [expletive] brilliant," Bono said during the ceremony, using the f-word as an adjective. The speech aired live on the East Coast. The FCC said it received 234 complaints, all but 17 of them from individuals associated with the Parents Television Council, a nonprofit group that monitors programs for adult content.

The FCC rejected the complaints Oct. 3 in a written statement that used the f-word far more often than Bono did on the air. David H. Solomon, chief of the FCC's enforcement bureau, said the word "may be crude and offensive, but, in the context presented here, did not describe sexual or excretory organs and activities."

That distinction is a key to test whether a statement meets a federal standard for broadcast indecency, according to FCC staffers. Mr. Solomon said in the ruling that Bono used the vulgarity as an adjective or to emphasize an exclamation and that "the use of specific words, including expletives or other 'four-letter words' does not render material obscene."

Laura Mahaney, director of corporate and entertainment affairs for the Parents Television Council, has vowed an appeal. "The ruling is outrageous. It's splitting hairs," she said.

Activists said they fear the FCC's ruling will allow the f-word and other vulgarities to become more common in prime-time television. "We're gradually getting to the point where nothing will be off-limits," said Jim O'Connor, president of the Cuss Control Academy, a Lake Forest, Ill., group that advises individuals on ways to limit cursing. Spokesmen for NBC and the other major broadcast networks rejected the suggestion that the ruling will lead to more salty language in prime time.

However, they acknowledge they face heavy competition from cable networks such as HBO and FX, which have more freedom to air edgy shows because they do not deliver programs over the FCC-regulated airwaves.

The FCC's Enforcement Bureau issued the ruling on Bono's language. The five-member FCC panel did not vote on the matter. Commissioner Michael J. Copps, one of two Democrats on the panel, said he has not reviewed the case, but if it had come before him, he may not have dismissed the complaints.

"I do believe under the right circumstances that a word in and of itself can be indecent without having to fit in with a wider context," he said.

Six years ago, activists and the Clinton administration pushed the networks to adopt a content-ratings system that would enable V-chips to block programs parents deemed inappropriate.
At the time, some network executives feared the ratings system would lead to bland scripts and cost them viewers.
For the most part, broadcasters have continued to push the limits of decorum with programs such as "NYPD Blue," a pioneer in the use of four-letter words. The show crossed another line last season when ABC permitted writers to slip a coarse word for bull dung into an episode.

With a router, you're stuck with what ports the router decides you should be allowed to open or close. You don't really get any realtime monitoring tools, and you're caught within the constraints set by the software writers who wrote the router's OS.

With a computer acting as a router, you can decide to run other services, you get better logging (to track down people trying to hack your system, etc), and you generally get better thruput. You can get realtime tracking of packets going through your network, etc, etc, etc, etc...

That one's easy.

Two nics.. one to the DSL/Cable modem, one to a switch, and you can connect as many computers as you have ports on the switch.. You're not limited to 253 like on most of the "routers" out there.

Of course, if you want to go high dollar, you could get a professional quality router, such as the Bay Networks or Cisco routers, which don't have as many limitations as the cheapass $100 routers people buy for broadband, but those are essentially a computer without a monitor and keyboard ports.

I personally have 18 computers running.. but that's just me.

Ok, Randy.. Just keep deluding yourself. You don't know the flexibility benefits you get from running a computer as a router, because apparently you haven't ever run one. Whether it's from laziness, lack of equipment, lack or knowledge, or lack of time, I don't know, but it's really your loss.

OK, so I have a "cheapass" router. That's fine. It works, firewalls me, and doesn't use nearly as many kilowatt hours as your "machine" does to do the same thing.

As far as limitations go, you really don't know what you are talking about. It's not crippled in the least. Matter of fact, I'll bet with only it's built in firmware that it can best your boatanchor.

Here's the link to the important stuff:

Sideband, you've kind of pissed me off with your attitude, and that's fine. I don't think you really meant to, and I'll give you the benefit of the doubt on that, but I would appreciate you reading a bit before you make sweeping assumptions.

Take care,

Randy

Really? Can your router do act as a DNS? Can it do multinetwork NAT?
Can it do IPV6-over-IPV4 tunneling? Can it do address/trafrfic/source-specific port forwarding? Does it even know what IPV6 is? Can it do ARPD? How about TFTP (no, that's not a typo.)?

Somehow I think not.

Guess my archaic machine does a little more than your cheapass router...

You are comparing old shit to state of the art equipment. I choose to use a router because it's the best way to go. In my home I have 3 machines...not 18 as you do, but still, they are all networked through the router, which does a wonderful job. I have one each:

1 gig ram 3200
Epox mainboard

AMD 2000XP+
1 gig ram 3200
Gigabyte mainboard

Intel 1.7 P4
768 megs sdram
Asus mainboard

I am not at loss for equipment or knowledge. I agree that at one time the way to go was to use a PC as a router, but as you said, the new routers are like cheap pc's with no keyboard or monitor. Just check the links I have posted before you make rash judgements. I think, if you do enough reading, that you will be impressed with the capabilities of the routers on the market now.

Randy:

Show me a broadband router costing under $150.00 that does ARPD and TFTP. Show me ONE that does them both, and I'll admit you're right. I don't think you can do it.

Now, the $1000-$4000 and higher Cisco and Bay routers will do it, but like I said, these are basically computers without keyboard and video ports, with CPU, RAM, Hard drive, etc.

Great, let me guess, you must be another one of those lazy, anything goes, pot smoking liberals, from B.C., that lives off government handouts. How nice. I love paying the highest taxes in the civilized world. No wonder we can't get rid of the liberal dictatorship. Give the people pot to smoke, filth on TV, and the "F" word, what more could you ask for. At least the "Yanks" you call them, have a culture and respect their traditions. I can't say that for canaduh. If it weren't for the "Yanks", we would probably be speaking Russian. Now if the Americans would like to take over canadah.....please!!!

That's an adverb, not an adjective.

Actually Ron, I didn't write the above point on grammatical content.

The FCC did (!) in their 'official' decision. Guess it proves the point that the FCC should be regulating technical issues and not issues of program content.

Your typical Washington DC bureaucracy at work.

When their not wasting money their likely wasting time and putting out useless and/or esoteric info that's not worth the ink used to coat the paper saidsame is printed upon.

"soon" is as soon as you suck enough dicks to buy a bus ticket.

Post an auction here, then. You cum faced piece of wormy dogshit, you know what will happen.

Now...on your knees in front of George Michael. We know you want him.

You may communicate with him because he is a licensed station. Part 97 only distinguishes this. I don't remember the exact location in Part 97. You may not interfere with him to make him stop.

Twisty is right here. It's all in the intent. But the carelessness can be brought into account. If you do not take the care to listen before you transmit you are just as guilty. If you call CQ or "tune up" before you listen then you are liable for any interference you cause.

You missed the part where I qualified the answer. You may not answer a CQ if you can hear another station on the same frequency. If you hear W5XXX calling CQ and you also hear another station that is in a QSO you may not answer the CQ. To do so would certainly cause interference to the other QSO in progress.

Please show me where the FCC rules (or any other rules) allow you to interfere with an illegal station. If you cannot, and you can't, then what you say is nothing more than opinion and has absolutely no weight in a court of law.

At least he knows that part of the regulations and doesn't interpret it to his use. So what if he's a codeless tech (yes I do make fun of them but the are still licensed amateur operators who passed one of the same tests that I did) he knows and respects the regs!

I still remember how to change channels.

Programming is driven by revenue.
If people watch it, then the ad time is worth money, and whatever it is,
we'll get more of it.
If people turn it off, then the ad time looses value, and whatever it is, it will get pulled.

Hard to imagine a more democratic method of selection.

Nah,,I'm not interested in control of others, as I'm quite secure with myself and my ego isn't taking an ass kicking like Lelnad and Geogre and Frank and Dogie and Davey.
I like it here in rec.radio.cb,,,where else can you get so many lessers to follow at your heels? LOL...,moderation can be a form of fascism. I couldn't help notice in a re-quote that anal retentives nocodes claim they are suddenly "prohibited"... LOL? Fine by me.....let's all talk about what we WISH we could sell from now on..... Example: I wish I had a used Hurricane for sale. It would be in great shape, do 350 watts below 30 MHZ, and work perfectly. I would probably take 125 bucks for it if I had one to sell. Or, we can talk about what some of us may have had on our shelves at one time. Example: Old, original Davemade 8 pill is collecting dust. If anyone would like to discuss this item or assist with the appraisal of such an item, please contact me via email.

Gee Frank, your need to lie is now inherent. You introduced the rude behavior of snipping posts you reply to, not for brevity, but for your own intentional purpose of taking the reply out of context in whcih it was meant. When I mentioned this juvenile tactic and asked you to do it myself, and your mild retardation, communication deficit, and ego

  In any event, you initated the behavior, setting the tone and

I'm guilty of it as well, Kevin, but have a few friends that are nocodes. I can't seem to understand or comprehend why one who wishes to be a hammie does it half-assed, but I don't make my failure to comprehend such inaction another's problem, like certain nocodes do on a daily basis in rec.radio.cb. I'm still waiting for Frank to key up and meet me, Tim, or ANYONE from this group on HF, like he said he would. It goes hand in hand with his claims about identity. He feels (despite ALL internet and usenet advice on prvacy and security) that a post carries no weight unless one reveals their personal identity or anything else Frank wishes to know about irrelevant personal information. Here comes that damn double-edged sword again.... perhaps many others would be more inclined to believe Frank's claims concerning FCC law if he actually had a clue about the law and implementations relating to cb and hammie radio. And what better way to become acquainted with such than by becoming licensed for (ALL) the bands relating to amateur radio? As we see, many simply want the law to read a certain way, so they misinterpret it to their likes opposed to the reality and spirit of the law.

2500 miles on it now and I'm getting 14 to 15 overall. I've been told by

My Dad's friend had one of those Spyders. Turbo and everything. I don't remember it being faster than 15 sec or so. My Dad's '62 F-85 Jetfire kicked it's ass. 215ci/215hp, aluminum block, turbocharged. Weighed about 2500 pounds. 14.1 sec at Irwindale on skinny little 14 inch tires. ;-)

He had more to do with the death of the corvair than anyone. What's sad is that the corvair was a pretty nice car by '65. The safety problems were in the earlier years.

Also, this was, more or less, before the government mandated that safety belts be mandatory.

It was crazy back then.

I'll have to do a search at the US Patent Office to see who might have a patent on the f-word. And to see if they wrote it offensively.

I don't know if any Al Qada people set up shop in Canada anyway. If Quebec ever splits off like they almost did some years ago, sure, join us.
We could use the extra area. Be interesting to see if we could get sixty-

You don't know diddily, DouGay; you never did and you never will.

Sorry I don't have any amps to tease you with and I don't auction anything, but I do have a couple of items for sale if anyone's interested:

Uniden HR2600 with ChipSwitch: covers 10/11/12m (24.800 to 29.995 MHz IIRC), no other mods, works fine, with mic, mounting bracket & knobs, and original box. Asking $200 OBO + shipping.

CommScan 200-G digital readout for MB8719 PLL chip (original Cobra 142, 148, 2000, and some of the President line) in original white box with instructions. Asking $65 OBO + shipping.

My addy is good, unlike DouGay's or Georgie-girl's, but make sure you mention in the Subject line the item you're interested in or your message will be deleted along with all the phoney "MS critical patches" and Nigerian scam letters.

I was always under the impression that the word "$HIT" was considered more indecent than the "F" word by the FCC.

Here's one, that's my friend Mike in the pic. I'm sure it will surface on some whacked out webpage now.

We can only have 52 states. That would be a full deck.

Unless the other station on the frequency is illegal, then it isn't interference since the illegal station has no rights.

I guess I still miss your point, whatever it is. It would be perfectly legal for me to answer w5xxx's cq and ask him to move up or down to a clear frequency to establish contact. You must not get on the ham bands much or you would hear this often. Maybe w5xxx was calling cq on this frequency for some time before the other station's came up on the frequency, so who is causing the interference then? I wish you would quote me the FCC rule that says I cannot answer a cq on a frequency where there is an ongoing contact and ask the cq station to move to a clear frequency.

Actually, "brilliant" is the direct object of the sentence, which by definition, is a noun, so that particular modifier is an adjective, and not an adverb. "This" is the subject, "is" is the verb, 3PS of "to be", and the sentence is actually not grammatically correct, so there are some problems deciding what part each word performs, or the fucking intent. When you have an illiterate moron musician trying to speak the King's English, you get "This is really, really, fucking brilliant." What the fuck does that mean? Is there, perchance, a light in his eyes that makes him unable to read the fucking teleprompter?

If he were to have said "This is really, really fucking brilliantly done", then 'fucking' would have been modifying an adverb, which still makes it an adjective. The only other uses of "fucking" would be either present participle ("Bubba is fucking his new cellmate"), or gerund (a noun formed from a verb, such as "I enjoy fucking", or maybe the classic failed Minnie Mouse insanity defense, during their divorce proceeding, where Mickey tells the Judge that Minnie is "fucking Goofy."

Your posts contain more about sexuality and perversions than about the law.
Even the real "pro-legal" people are now seeing you for what you are... a

Can they not speak for themselves?
They are not bothering me, as you try to.

Have you also noticed that I don't bother Leland and Jerry?
Of course you noticed... but that goes against your lies, so you don't mention it. They are not bringing me into anything... and from what Jerry says, at least he makes some attempt at changing things in the real World, not just trolling this group.

>-Your rrcb "humour" site

Can you prove that accusation?
I thought not... as you say, you do not need to tell the truth.

>that you promote

You are the one promoting it... you reference to it in another thread, even giving someone the URL to go there and see it.
Maybe it is your site, huh?

> taunts pro legal people

Have you not seen the pages and parts aimed at Mopar, Dave, Jay, Tim, Coax length police... and even me?
Of course you have... they don't fit your lies and accusations, so you ignore them.

It looks to me like Mopar gets featured the most on that site... but you don't mention that.
I don't see him whining about the site, like you are... you wussy.

> by calling them gay.

Where does it call "pro-legal" people "Gay"... I have not seen where any such word is used. Maybe you could give the URLs of pages where it says such things, to back up your claim.

Or maybe you will just hide behind accusations without proof... as is usual for you and your buddies. Maybe you are just trying to divert attention from the fact that you and your buddies are doing all the "gay" crap.

>-You are trolling like mad, name calling, and shit slinging with the >worst of them.

I am responding to posts made by you and your buddies... which mainly feature sexual suggestions and perversions.
If you cannot see that, then you have your eyes shut.

There are none so blind as those who don't want to see.

>better and that is why you're p*ssed.

You are the ones who need to resort to sexual suggestions, insults, and foul language (as above).
That shows that you have lost control. You are failing, and you know it...
so abuse is all you have left.

>Brainlessbluster if you are not a sissy

See, you are more interested in sexual matters.

Define a keyclown. To me, it seems that anyone you want to argue clear many times. If you cannot read, then go learn.

The trolls don't want people to speak for themselves.
They like to make enemies of people who would not otherwise be so.

There was no need to even bring them into it... I have little or no dealings with Leland or Jerry.

Maybe, with it being a small job and not worth much, he wasn't too bothered about the job.
Small jobs are fine, as long as the customer does not know how small the job really is. But, when you know that it is just a bulb or two, how much could he get away with charging?

I have known repair places to put down extra components on a repair sheet, to justify their price to the customer. They cannot do that if you already know what is wrong with something.

One repair company I have worked for did just that, and used special marks to let the office staff know not to include those components on stock control, as they were not really used. They refused to do on the spot repairs, no matter how simple a job was... because the customer would know how quick and easy it was, and may object to the high price.
And they were service agents for almost every "brown goods" manufacturer known here in the UK.

Peter.

Have you ever tried the on-line scanner on the "Shields Up" site?
It runs through a series of ports to see if it gets a response. It will then give a report, stating if ports were open, closed (giving a "closed" response), or in "stealth" mode (giving no reply). They also have a test program download, to see if your firewall would allow outgoing connections.
A firewall should block both, and let you know (if you have warnings enabled).

There is also a program called "Net Peeker", which can display and log all data transfer with IP numbers, ports used and which software is being used for that connection.

Some ports have to be open, to allow the data you are requesting or sending.
If all ports were kept closed, you wouldn't get anything from the Internet.

My firewall will block any software trying to make a connection, unless I have told it to allow that software. It certainly blocks and warns about plenty of attempts from other computers on the Internet. The largest amount of attempts is when I connect through my usual ISP... the attempts just keep coming, from the same place.
I also see from my log that attempts from my ISP have been blocked. I am not sure why they are trying to access certain ports on my computer, but blocking them has no ill effect.

Any idea why my ISP should be making my firewall complain?

Peter.

The fact remains that I no longer snip your posts since your last tantrum about

You actually raised a semi-intelligent point, even though it's already been proven to be just another keyclown excuse. If Joe Schmoe has a license to use xx.xxx MHz, he is not required to use it 24/7. In fact, there is no law that says he has to use it at all. But it is available to him at any time -IF- he decides to use it. Which leads into your other semi-intelligent point....

>Fact is, NOBODY uses 11 meter "allocations" these days because they >have BETTER means of communication (satellite, etc.). So your point is >moot (and outdated).

Those "better" means of communication are not 100% reliable, nor are they immune from pileups. In fact, there is -no- communication system that is perfect. So to compensate, the military and other government agencies rely on the redundancy of numerous backup systems -- including, but certainly not limited to, radio on the HF spectrum.

Here are the FACTS, Twist:

FACT #1: I did not initiate the practice -- it has been an accepted practice long before I began posting in Usenet.

FACT #2: Everyone accepts the practice except you.

FACT #3: Upon your notification (tantrum) that you didn't approve of snipping,

You keep saying this and have not backed it up one single bit. You are wrong, flat wrong. Where in the FCC rules (or any other rules) do you find this? Until you can site the statute or court case yours is nothing more than an opinion and would carry no weight in a court case.

Now there's something that does make sense. It is perfectly legal to answer a CQ and say "up 10" or something to that effect. Your first defense using this argument didn't mention this at all. You were simply going to answer the CQ and never mentioned moving.

The FCC rule that says you can't "answer a CQ and have a QSO" if you are going to cause interference to an ongoing QSO is 97.101d. IF, now as you have changed the conditions, you answer the CQ and move immediately then you are not intentionally and maliciously causing interference. That's the key, your interference may not be intentional or malicious. The original premise of this thread (interference one) is that you MAY NOT cause malicious interference to a communication or signal. Incidental and/or accidental interference is a different matter.

The argument that nobody has the legal right to operate illegally is..., well, self-validating. Why don't you cite a case where a ham was busted for causing interference to an illegal transmission?

Greetings to all!
I am sorry for the length of the message but please read it!

I am having some problems with my President Lincoln (Uniden HR2510): it won't transmit! When I press the PTT button, the TX icon appears on the LCD, but that's all! It is still receiving and nothing happens.
Now the second problem: one day I turned it on, and a horrible loud noise came from the speaker. I turned it off immediately. Now every time I turn the radio on, it draws as much as 2A for about a second, and then then the current draw drops to 1,5A (still too much) and a quiet tone can be heard. I found out that the TDA1905 chip is getting extremely hot very quickly - so this may be the cause of the sound problem, and I hope that replacing the chip will solve it. But there still is the TX problem that I can't solve. Maybe you have experienced something like that. Please help!

If you hear a QSO going on and you do not move then your interference is intentional because you are aware of the ongoing QSO and don't do anything to avoid the interference. Just like stepping on a foot that you KNOW is there, that's intentional. It may also be malicious but it doesn't have to be both to be illegal.

Greetings to all, please have a look, if it interests you to take part in an experiment with Electric Thruster Ion Plasma Engine tests onboard the Space Station.
The engine causes a VHF radio blackout on Earth and your help is need as part of ground receiving network to map the extent of the effect.
Please go to
http://www.qsl.net/vk3ukf/etshoadowozindexqsl.html

There are links to more information at the Russian site.
You don't have to be an amateur radio operator, schools and S.W.L.'s are also welcome.

You can look at that from both sides -- If you are busy jawing nice and legal with another ham, then some freeloader butts in like you weren't there, is it -your- responsibility to vacate the freq? Or is it -his- responsibility to yield right-of-way to your convo, just like in your example above?

Well it should have made sense to you the first time and I did not change the conditions. Here is the original I posted 10/10/03 7:25 PM, try to note carefully where I say "I will ask the station calling cq to move up or down to a clear frequency and give me a calling cq and assuming the other station is a legal station, I will ask the station calling cq to move up or down to a clear frequency and give me a

the other legal station, and cause interference to that station, that would

I have experienced exactly what you described concerning the non-apparent transmit,,in fact, the results were identical. Poor solders, crimp-ons, couplers, jumpers, coax, tuner, etc., and of course, the antenna system can duplicate this problem. Since the radio is acting up in other ways, I'm certain one of our whiz bang techs can steer you in the right direction.

No Frank,,you most certainly initiated the practice between us. And you most certainly continued the behavior well past my taking issue with the practice. If you have the need and wish to misapply what I say and somehow infer that it was you who literally introduced the behavior to usenet, I say go for it.
No, Frank, most people do not accept it, except for brevity. Snipping posts that contain what you wish not to read or acknowledge is done with an underhanded agenda, not for brevity, Frank.
Not only did you not cease the practice of selective snipping when such boorish behavior was called to your attention, but, in fact vehemently defended the practice in several of your posts.
Now, about meeting on HF like you claimed you would over a year ago....lying about your hammie status illustrates your shame.

If you're in "stealth" mode, your ISP will ping you repeatedly to see if there's really someone online at that port, but your firewall won't give them any information.

Well, I've been quiet for awhile, so here goes. I heard Riley Hollingsworth himself state that an illegal station has no recourse while causing interference to a legitimate station. While I don't have the rule, chapter and verse in front of me, stop and think about it: The entire US Code is based on compliance with rules set forth and are not predicated to "excuse" the breaking of said rules at the expense of the rightful users of a particular frequency. If an Amateur, again operating on his assigned bands, were to be interferred with on an "equal" basis with an illegal, then it would be impossible for the rules to be enforced, or would have to be sanctioned on the same footing with the unauthorized offender.

The answer is simply that IF an authorized station is being inteferred with by a "bandit", the illegal station has NO rights to be protected. Period. Indeed, the legal station can continue to operate regardless of any "interference" caused. It is only IF an authorized station is causing interference to another, deliberate or not, that action will be in order. In a nutshell, as long as I am not causing deliberate interference to another LEGAL station, I can run full legal limit over the top of a "bandit" without recourse.

In the instance that most of the readers associate with me, the 10 Meter issue, if I hear a trucker (for example) operating on the band, then I can run fast CW right over the top of the driver----no matter if his communications are completely blocked. For the best answer, call 717-338-2502(Mr Hollingsworth). It might not sound the way illegals want it be, but it IS the way it is.

This calls to mind an article in one of the ham mags 20 to 30 years ago where someone planted a battery operated transmitter and morse code generator that would key up at random for a few seconds every few hours. It would say "<hated person's callsign's suffix> SUX" Suppose he didn't like me, so it would then be "ISE SUX" The frequency was on the input of a popular repeater somewheres out West, like Arizona. Mountains in the area shielded the rogue transmitter's signal from inhabited areas; only the repeater could hear it. It was planted in a wildlife preserve, antenna partially hidden in a thicket of local weeds, and battery and transmitter buried. They had to get permission from forest rangers or such to do a fox hunt to find it.

My point is that someone used code to say naughty words.....

PUSH TO IDENTIFY UNLICENSED 10-METER OPERATORS CONTINUES

A concerted effort begun last spring to monitor for and possibly identify unlicensed operators on 10 meters will continue through October. The FCC already has asked the ARRL Amateur Auxiliary/Official Observers for assistance. Now, FCC Special Counsel Riley Hollingsworth is inviting hard information on suspected interlopers from all amateurs.

"If I don't receive reports, we'll have to conclude that unlicensed operation on 10 meters no longer is a problem," Hollingsworth said this week. Hollingsworth's initial request to beef up monitoring came in the wake of complaints from the amateur community that rose to the level of a major enforcement headache. He's expressed some disappointment, however, that the number of solid reports received so far has been few, although he's aware that a problem exists.

Hollingsworth asks amateurs to be specific in what they report.
"Everybody should police their own neighborhood," he suggested. "Turn on the radio, and take a listen on the band. If you hear a loud signal that's obviously an unlicensed interloper, see if you can track it down."

Hollingsworth said that in the case of a suspected unlicensed trucker on the highway, amateurs should try to get the license plate number of the tractor--not the trailer--or at least the company name and, if possible, the DOT number.

The FCC does not require direction-finding data but would appreciate, where possible, names and addresses of alleged or suspected operators.

Audio recordings of apparently illegal transmissions also can prove helpful.

Individual amateurs with solid information on alleged unlicensed operation on 10 or even 12 meters should report it to the FCC via e-mail
Official Observers should file their reports through normal ARRL channels.

ARRL Field and Regulatory Correspondent Chuck Skolaut, K0BOG, says the FCC wants to pin down specific areas where unlicensed operation is prevalent in the US. He and Hollingsworth concede, however, that not all illegal 10-meter operation is of domestic origin.

The FCC's initial request last May request was made in accordance with the Communications Act and a longstanding agreement between ARRL and the FCC regarding the use of Amateur Radio volunteers to assist in enforcement.

I'd say it sounds like a bad capacitor in the audio section.
Seems like a common problem for 2510/2600/Lincoln/HTX-100 series.

No, but was going to look for one...
There's one on ebay, but the seller did not put the length on the listing.
E-mailed him, did not get an answer.
And I got myself a 102" steel already.

Judy Collins' sung the version I remember, but while looking it up I see that there is some confusion as to who wrote it: Neil Diamond or Joni Mitchell?

Just a simple question:
What type of modulation does the Cobra 18WXST use?
AM, FM or both?
I didn't manage to find anything in it's description or in the user's manual.

The answer is simply that IF an authorized station is being inteferred with by a "bandit", the illegal station has NO rights to be protected. Period. Indeed, the legal station can continue to operate regardless of any "interference" caused. It is only IF an authorized station is causing interference to another, deliberate or not, that action will be in order. In a nutshell, as long as I am not causing deliberate interference to another LEGAL station, I can run full legal limit over the top of a "bandit" without recourse.
In the instance that most of the readers associate with me, the 10 Meter issue, if I hear a trucker (for example) operating on the band, then I can run fast CW right over the top of the driver----no matter if his communications are completely blocked. For the best answer, call 717-338-2502(Mr Hollingsworth). It might not sound the way illegals want it be, but it IS the way it is.
Jerry

Yup. Call the old man and ask him if it is acceptable for an amateur to deliberately interfere with anything at all. Why even mention an illegal signal? Because it makes it sound the way several radio Kops wish it to be, but is not so. The REASON for your interference, is moot.
Again, intent means everything.

I was wrong it wasn't Neil Diamond. I think Judy Collins was the one that made it popular. Don't know where I got the idea about Neil Diamond.

I like some of his music, most of his music was over played. You get

So, how short IS the list now...

I've heard at least 2 of them on national TV in 'family hours'.

"Piss" has been heard a few times, but the only one I can think of I'm not sure of. War Games? Anyone know of other places?

And "teats" all over the place. Just recently in a broadcast of 'Witness' with Harrison Ford in the barn with the Amish farmer...

That's not the issue. You are the one coming onto the frequency where there is an existing QSO. But to answer your question it would be wise to move in order to not cause an issue but it is the responsibility of the other party to move. I've had that happen before, some fool starts calling CQ without asking if the frequency is clear. I (or the other in my QSO) let him know that the frequency is busy but he either ignores us or says something to the effect that it isn't "our" frequency. Usually we move. It's not worth getting into a shouting match with a fool. We just note his callsign and act accordingly.

You are changing the conditions again. Yes, it is legal to answer and ask him to move up, I've done this quite often -- especially on 20-meters. That was never part of the issue until now. What you may not do is answer his CQ and carry on a QSO on the same frequency as the original one.

This has not been the issue here. Sure the "illegal stations" has no recourse when HE is causing interference. That's not the issue. The issue is-- is it legal to cause interference to an illegal station.

No, that's not what Hollingsworth has said. The "bandit" has no basis to issue a complaint, this is true. BUT (and it's a BIG BUT) the legal station still may not cause intentional interference, and NO you may not run "full legal power" UNLESS conditions warrant it. If the other legal guy says that you are 59 you MAY NOT run full power. Part 97.313(a) says you must run the minimum power necessary to continue a reliable contact. If it's 1 watt then you must run 1 watt. Now there is some subjection here but reason must prevail. You won't be sited for running 50 watts if the guy on the other end says you are 59+40 and 1 watt will give you 59+10. Personally I usually crank my power back just to save wear and tear on the equipment.

What you say is in direct contradiction to what is published in the "FCC Rule Book." It specifically states that you may not cause interference with ANY station. Even the legalese in Part 97 specifies "any communication or signal." I don't know how it can be made more clear than that.

What common sense? "It's ok to break the law just because the other guy is doing it first" or "I don't agree with your interpretation so I'm going to make up my own?" Actually you might be right, this sort of thinking is becoming more and more "common" every day.

Same show, last season, virtually every regular cast member uttered,

Your are really dense, I have not change the conditions, I said from the first I would ask the station calling cq to move up or down to a clear frequency (did you even read my original post on the subject? Can you read?). I never said anything about carrying on a qso on the same frequency, unless the ongoing qso involves illegal stations, then I would not be violating any rules to do so. You need to work on your reading comprehension.

And if legal stations decide to use the same frequency of the illegal station, by virtue of the illegal station being illegal, HE is the one causing the interference.

Court case precedent, regulation or opinion? Frequency usage has always been first-come first-use with the exception of emergency communication and nets.

what you just posted from the ARRL Letter.

Mr. Hollingsworth's statements confirm what I've said all along: That the so-called problem is nothing more than a few highly vocal and disgruntled whiners (you and Georgie-girl in particular) making a mountain out of a molehill.

Sure, there may be an "intruder" or two, but it's not the major prob you guys claim it is. It's just something more for you to piss & moan about and a misguided reason for you to troll a CB newsgroup with your trash.

Um, no; it is modifying "brilliant", which is a noun. Thus it is an adjective.

From: Boating Safety Comm Volunteers (maketwistypay@yahoo.com)
Subject: Volunteers Needed To Locate Radio Pirate, Tampa Bay Area
Newsgroups: rec.radio.cb, alt.fishing, rec.boats
Date: 2003-08-19
(rec.radio.cb,alt.fishing,rec.boats.crusing,rec.boats)

This Saturday, August 23, beginning at 7AM EST, at least one volunteer boat will be cruising the Tampa Bay area in order to gather evidence of an alleged pirate radio operator. His name is unknown, but he goes by the handle of "Twistedhed", he is an illegal radio operator who encourages others to do the same.

If you have a boat and are in the Tampa area, please join us in our effort. You will be helping to contribute to the public good. Such "radio pirates" often interfere with health and safety communications and emergency transmissions. The purpose of this Saturday's activity is to gain evidence to get "Twistedhed" busted for his freeband violations by the FCC office in Tampa.

There is reason to believe "Twistedhed" may hold an amateur license. If so, his penalties for operation on the "freeband" could be very severe. Last fall the FCC tracked transmissions on 27.535 MHz to a residence. The offender initially faced a $17,000 fine. This month alone, FCC special counsel Riley Hollingsworth sent enforcement letters to amateur licensees in Georgia and California regarding unlicensed operation in and around 11 meters.

If you have a boat and are in the Tampa Bay area, we need your help.

To catch Twistedhed on the freeband and get him "FCC busted", we will need to have solid evidence. One way is to photograph him on his boat with a telephoto lens. Get the boat's name and reg. number also in the photo. At the same time a recording must be made of the operator illegally transmitting. It may be difficult but it CAN be done. This method has been proven successful by hams in North Carolina for catching illegal truckers on 10 meters.

Be advised this is NOT stalking or harassment, simply a legal effort to gain evidence and merely OBSERVE a crime being committed. These are PUBLIC waterways and ALL boaters are permitted to be there. We urge you NOT to confront Twistedhed. Leave that to the FCC and the courts. You are just there to gather evidence.

Show me a court case where a ham has been proscuted for communicating over illegal signals. Show me where the FCC has even issued a single warning for such, and it happens all the time, especially on 10 meters.

The illegal station has no standing or rights, legal stations have precedent in use of the frequency over illegal stations...period. Don't believe me, try your first-come first-use theory out on one of the air traffic control or police frequencies. And were did you get the idea that a net has first choice of a frequency, if there is a qso on a frequency a net uses before the net starts up, the net is obliged to move to another frequency. As I say, you don't have clue.

Since you can't even find the 10 meter band dickieboy, you wouldn't have a clue as to the severity of the problem. It is more than and "intruder or two", many illegal ops use the 10 meter band everyday, especially truckers. You would know that if you knew how to find the 10 meter band and knew how to operate your radio.

The presence of an illegal signal is the same as no signal there and to communicate over such by a licensed station is not breaking the law.

If you can use 10 meters, you can use many more. 10 is dead now anyway. Why don't you be a real ham and use the other bands? As for truckers, don't forget that everything you have was delivered in a TRUCK. Funny how that works. You need to get out more, the world is out there, all you have to do is join in.

We now have "Ham Radio" magazine, and "73 Magazine" both now defunct.

Would you like the adjective "defunct" in front of ARS???

I know this may be quite beyond you, but it is very easy to listen to a signal and determine if it is an emergency call. You need to learn something about FCC rules.

> You do not own the freq. If > it is busy, go to another. Simple, and good pr too.

If it is a ham band frequency, I am licensed to transmit there, my license gives me that right. The illegal siganl has no rights to the frequency so I don't have to go to another frequency becasuse of the illegal signal. I can transmit right over the illegal signal and am perfectly within the rules. Why should I go to another frequency when I am the one who has the right to be there and the illegal signal does not? The illegal signal is the one who should go somewhere else.

Yea, or the truckers talk of fing this and fing that, that sure sounds like an emergency.

> Um, no; it is modifying "brilliant", which is a noun. Thus it is an adjective.

Brilliant is an adjective in the above sentence as he was not referring to a precious gem.

brili¿½liant
adj.
Full of light; shining. See Synonyms at bright.
Relating to or being a hue that has a combination of high lightness and strong saturation.
Sharp and clear in tone.
Glorious; magnificent: the brilliant court life at Versailles.
Superb; wonderful: The soloist gave a brilliant performance.
Marked by unusual and impressive intellectual acuteness: a brilliant mind; a brilliant solution to the problem. See Synonyms at intelligent.
n.
A precious gem, especially a diamond, finely cut in

So the sentence in question has the following structure.
This - pronoun, subject of sentence is - verb, state of being really, really [expletive] - string of adverbs modifying the adjective that follows.
[expletive] referred to is a special case where the adverb has been formed from a verb.
brilliant - a characteristic and thus an adjective not a noun.

It has the same nature as the sentence "John is tired" which uses an adjective to describe John. It is not the nature as the sentence "John is a boy". The first sentence is noun-verb-adjective where the latter is noun-verb-noun.

Gee, DouGay; is that the best you can do? Change his statement to make it look stupid? All you did was make you look stupid instead.

And the rest of your post is total fantasy, so I'll snip it.

Actually, it -is- the issue. In the extreme case that the entire band is occupied with illegal QSO, no ham would be able to operate because the illegal stations would be protected from interference. It's just not right, it's not consistent with the intent and purpose of the law, and no court or commission has ever found otherwise, or ever will.

I'm still not a ham, if that's what you mean. And I'm sure that bothers you to no end, because I know how much you hate hams. I haven't bothered with a license because I have little interest in ham radio, and even less now that the code requirement is going to be lifted. Pretty soon HF is going to be filled by everybody and his brother, and the FCC's increasing tolerance with freeloaders such as yourself is going to make chaos of everything between 2 to 30 MHz. And if the FCC bows to the ARRL and ruins the 1750m band by annexing it as a ham band, chances are that I won't ever have any interest in a license. But if you still think that I'm N7VCF, my offer of proof to the contrary is still open.

It isn't about "everyone " else, Frank, as mucch as you need it be. It's about you and your claims. Attempting to turn my questioning of your radio-related claim into a personal matter is your problem.

You have no proof and no matter what you ever present, you were forced

>has ever found otherwise, or ever will.

And who are you to interpret the law? You can't determine what the "intent and purpose" of any law is. Only a judge can do that.

I don't think anyone would disagree that the FCC wouldn't do anything to a ham for operating over an illegal station, but we're not discussing that, we're discussing if it's actually illegal or not to transmit over an unlicensed station in the ham bands (Can't figure out why though, since this is a "CB" newsgroup!). Sure, jaywalking is illegal, but do cops usually enforce it? No. Same thing with this topic.

As long as two hams are having a QSO on a frequency and not giving the appearance of intentional interference, like singing, playing music, etc (or acknowledging the unlicensed station), then there's nothing to worry about.

Ya ever get the feeling of Deja-Vu?

I'd like to know how many of those "authorized stations" even attempt to use their "allotted bandwidth" between 27.415 and 28.000.

Actually, -you- need it to be about everyone else in order to validate your lame

The shame is yours, Twist. It's a classic case of projection -- you have failed to prove that I am any one of the five different hams you have claimed me to be, so you cling the one that has the least number of inconsistencies (N7VCF), create lies to fill in the blanks, then project the blame onto me by telling yourself it's my fault if I'm not N7VCF. Which explains your apprehension when I offer proof to the contrary -- it would destroy your delusional projection, and you would be forced to admit your guilt. It's so much easier just to project that shame on me, isn't it, Twist? Well, "misinterpreting my feelings are irrelevant, no matter your thoughts."

Now that you are knee-deep in crow feathers, why don't you put an end to your silliness and just ask me for the proof?

No standing rights? In this country he has all the rights until it is proven that he doesn't belong there. To jump out on the hypothetical limb, you don't know that he is there illegally. It is POSSIBLE that he is a licensed operator operating there without proper ID and not using the proper mode of operation. Until you can prove any of those he has just as much right to be there as you do. Of course either way he's in deep doodoo.

Just your opinion JJ, nothing more. The rules say "any communication or signal." Making a signal non-existent just because it doesn't belong there is a dangerous precedent. That would be just like making a person non-existent, thus having no rights, because he is where he is not supposed to be. The principle is the same. Using your "logic" I can shoot a person who is on my property without permission because he "doesn't exist."

Well, you start with an insult. This shows that your argument is already no good. But, yes you can listen to see if the signal is an emergency call.

Are you saying that you will listen and determine yourself whether or not it is a legal signal and then interfere if "warranted." Using your "logic" would give you the right to run someone off the road who is driving without a license just because you want to drive in his lane.

So using your logic and JJ's logic it would be illegal for you to run someone off the road if he didn't have a license to drive. You could do this JUST BECAUSE the road was crowded and you wanted his lane. What's the difference (other than safety)? The principle is the same. It all comes down to YOU taking the law into your own hands.

Enclosed are recordings of violations on the repeater by N8WWM. The transmissions continued for a considerable time and there was no evidence of a control operator.

Not quite -- while jaywalking is sometimes enforced, the law at issue has -never- been enforced for such a violation. If I'm wrong, cite the case.

I agree. If there is no indication that the interference is intentional or malicious, whether it is or not, it's unenforceable regardless of which interpretation you use.

I assume you meant to say "...it would be legal for you to run someone off the road...", and that wouldn't be true at all. First of all, that's considered to be assault with a deadly weapon in many states, so it's a really poor analogy. Regardless, assuming you make it look like an accident, the illegal driver has no legal recourse against you in any way, shape or form.

Any communication or signal? Does that make a second harmonic of a Shortwave broadcast transmitter a protected signal?

It isn't about "everyone " else, Frank,
I ddin't claim you snip posts "like everyone else",,you did, Frank, and now you are failing with an intentional misattribution. You always mention others in your desperate search for a branch or twig to cling to for support.

>No it isn't, which is why your excuse that I

I said nothing about you snipping posts before our first discussion. Our first discussion was several years ago when I demonstrated what a lying lid you are and forced you to admit it by pointing out your claims, exactly like I did now, and you, responded predictably,,,angry, offtopic, and personal. You made a claim, on topic, concerning your radio and hammie status plans. I pointed it out, and man, look at you whine.

>Actually, -you- need it to be about everyone

Ahh..(snicker),,you are reaching way beyond your capabilities of comprehension. Me questioning your claim concerning your hamie status has nothing to do with anyone but you. Your mild retardation has you somehow inferring that your behavior of looking to others is akin to mine. Nothing could be further from the truth. I am a loner, always have been, always will be. You, are a follower, Frank. A rabid, angry follower

Attempting to turn my questioning of your radio-related claim into a personal matter is your problem.

It's what I just said, Frank,,,you're a follower, and thats all you can ever be.

Presidential administration? LOL...No Frank,,you need to place down the liquor and realize what is taking place. You're attemtping to move further and further from your claim, but I shan't allow it. You said you would be hammie last September. I asked why you failed and you went to pieces,,,,LOL.

No, Frank,,I inquired of a radio topic you made and you became frantic and reduced yourself to crying about old, off-topic discussions. Check yourself.

Just can't help yourself, Frank. It's alright, though,,,you illustrate just fine your panic.

Nah,,the damage control, pathetic as it is when presented by yourself, failed when you turned personal. You made a claim on this group saying you were getting your license last fall. What happened? To get upset and make MEMEMEMEMEME your topic is fine, but your claim will not go away. Code hold you back?
You enjoy speaking of your

For the same reason "everyone else" (hahah) won;t ask you anything, Frank. You're an admitted liar. You;re one of the lowest. Even a thief the man in the mirror with a psychopathic rage.

That's the whole point. While it's clearly stated in the rules that you can't intentionally interfere with ANY radio communications, no one is going to slap you for "not hearing" an illegal station and operating within FCC regulations.

Ah, but don't you see, according to kevin and some other slow learners, by virtue of the illegal signal being on the frequencies before any legal signals, that establishes their right to be there, therefore you must not use those frequencies......NOT!!! By the fact that the FCC has never so much as issued even a warning notice to a licensed ham for transmitting on a frequency that is in use by an illegal signal establishes a de facto rule that it is NOT againt the rules to transmit on top of such illegal signals.

The Good Lord

Okay, now things are getting personal. It seems not only bushite soldiers murder our innocent families for no rational reason but to serve as enemies of God under the antiChrist, they now need to blindly forget about protecting the sacrificed family they almost know best as their stupid own. Who gives a fuck if bush wants to rob American tax payers a say in paying block grants to fix things they criminally break? See? This is why bush can't declare the money spent should be a loan, for then, someone might be held accountable. Billions have been already stolen from the UN's escrow account, while the central Iraq bank, has those heading it, likely directly involved in it's alleged current robbery. How else could the plan made prior succeed? Ha ha. It's almost like they imprison themselves on purpose for our benefit. ALL Americans are too weak as stupid they keep selling US. Now then, when's the fictional God King fellow, gonna make our entrance disguised as a simple man of few means, trying to get his show biz break in the international media under the fantastically named Johnny Wizard bill?

We, as, humanity, must make bush accountable for the criminal waging of our rights as Life. "Why blow up anything in Iraq", ask a mindless as DU poisoned bushite soldier participating in death squads to murder women and children? Our war crime perpetrators we need to raise our guns in defense to, are: buford blount, tommy franks, rumsfeld, bush, Condoleeza, and likely mueller.
Remember: The FBI informed US that bush's business partner, (THE UNARRESTED) General Ahmad mastered 200,000 DOLLARS to give Atta, The 9/11 Mastermind, then, worked with Condoleeza to devolop the 9/11 Afghanistan plan. A TOP SECRET Presidential Directive reported on by MSNBC's Jim Miklaszewski. A DOCUMENTED plan of not following the criminal leads to arrest the actual perpetrators, to secure criminal invasion against the American flag waving, Taliban. Dated two days before 9/11 came down, and confessed to MSNBC in March by the White house, after deliberation, as fully implemented. Evil is just the deceived disguised, and there's really not much to fear of really like whatever. Evil is dumb. Always has been. Humanity, through our public media, often glorifies humanities worst malcontents, as have deft skills of persuasion, instead of our failed ability to simply challenge criminal transgressions like those TRULY perpetrated by the bush demon for instance. Or how about a soldiers word, not found as capable, but for form letters to try and trick the family back home with bush lies crying. Have you heard the true death count? Who wouldn't defend their family from any irrational proud bushite soldier, who as cowards, would murder the practically defenseless and hungry, innocent and God loving, like our family as our brother at Guantanamo, while as traitors, fight to protect those responsible for murdering thousands of New Yorkers? No instead of protecting America, they spread radio-active toxic waste on themselves, while fighting to persecute people not guilty of any criminal offences. How weak and stupid, can the almost fictional antiChrist really take a dying America down counting for?

The ungodly bush demon demanded that evidence wasn't required to arrest the 9/11 culprits, that he decided instead, as planned before hand, with rumsfeld, would war our undefended families to toll further criminal sacrifices. Perhaps millions. Get bush for me please.

Johnny Wizard

It all seems pointless to his wife. ``Why is he there?'' Graham asked Brown, lips trembling.

First of all, the point here is not that 170,000 items were stolen from the Iraq museum, or that most American corporate media records the losses, as only those that were stolen from the lobby; it is that AMERICAN PLANNING was underminded by the demon bush "cabal".

The telephone exchange for example was blown up with several bunker busters (DU weapons containing hundreds of pounds of toxic waste to harm all of Humanity) for no reason but bush's evil to steal life from God and Nature. (The Iraqi military had hydrogen generators, and can use walky talkies instead of payphones.) Why blow up whatever in Iraq to murder our families for demon bush to cash US out as traitor I ask You?

Second, microscopic DU is a TOXIC heavy metal, as poisonious to human beings, and as light as the wind. Also, being radio-active, a single particle breathed into the lungs, can mutate DNA. Similarly to outside background radiation can externally, but at 1900 times the level, internally.

Um, no. A noun is a person, place, or thing. "Brilliant" is none of these See

has anyone ever heard any authorized stations in this freq spectrum?
wonder what the itu describes the use of these freqs as. does it agree with what the u.s. gov mandates? got some homework to do.... people please remember that what the u.s. says is the way freq allocation should be isn't always true. other countries, especially in this day and age, could give a rats ass what the u.s. says.

Um, not quite, Kevin. An illegal station has no rights of protection from interference caused by a LEGAL station operating within his own band and according to the rules governing said band. It is true that hams must not talk to the offending bandits,as you must know, for 2 reasons.
(1. One must not talk to the offending illegal station(s), and because the frequency that is most popular with the truckers is 28.085 AM and is restricted to non-voice operations. In a nutshell, you can run high-powered, fast CW right on top of the trucker and there ain't a thing he can do about it. After all, the driver gonna get PO'ed and report to Riley H that there is one of them thar mean "hammies" a-coverin' him up. That'd be a hoot!!!!!

NO, you ARE NOT!!!! Mr. Hollingsworth has already addressed this in some of his forums, explaining that the rule carries the assumption that all stations are operating within the rules governing the service. An illegal station has NO "rights" whatsover, and an Amateur who chooses to exercise his use of a given frequency may do so so long as there is NO INTERFERENCE willfully caused to another LEGAL station on the bands to which he holds license. Don't believe it? Call 717-338-2502. That is Mr. Hollingsworth's number in the Pennsylvania office of FCC. He has made this statement a number of times in order to clarify mistaken impressions. I SAW him say it,

I HEARD HIM SAY IT, and more than once. An illegal station has NO protection against interference by a station operating within that legal service's rules, and that legal station CAN run full legal limit right over the top of the bandit, and you can run holler for FCC all you want to, it won't do any good. I can see it now: "Mr FCC agent, sir, ah wuz a-tryin' tuh work this here skip station on one of them 'funny' channels, and this h'yar mean hammie kept a- messin' me up" See where it gets you. HAHAHAHA!
Not trying to be a smarty, but what I told you is the truth. You'll probably cuss me out, but it IS the truth!

.....that is what JJ and I have been saying all along.
Those who would attempt to impart some sort of legitimacy to stations that ALREADY know that they are out of band (and most of them do), are only looking for some sort of excuse for their own behavior in the hopes of "sharing" the blame or having some else shoulder it for them. Again, the rule is with the assumption of legality of on the part of BOTH operators who are legal according to the rules of the service (whatever it may be). If it were true that there was no liability on the part of the illegal station, then it would follow that the police department, for example, would have no recourse against illegals who interferred with their communications. If the police dispatcher keyed up to answer a call and "interferred" with an illegal, there would be no way to sanction against illegal operations of any sort. The rule that some folks pin their hopes on to justify their own actions actually applies to most licensed services: it means that to be "legal" the authorized users of a particular are following the rules set forth, etc. If a legal station indeed deliberately QRMed another legal station, then said operation can/will be cited for malicious interference. If there is a "bandit" on the frequency, there is no protection accrued to said illegal.

Jerry, I have said basically the same thing before, it just dosen't soak in to some. An illegal signal on the ham bands is not operating within the rules governing the amateur radio service and therefore has no standing or rights. Any interference to that station by a licensed ham station is not breaking any rules....period. Maybe kevin and others will eventually get it but don't hold your breath. Now lets hear it again about what if it is an emergency signal. I said ILLEGAL signal, a truly bonified emergency signal would be LEGAL for the duration of the emergency.

Two Brummies were fishing by the canal when one turns to the other and says:-

"Wot?", says the other "Yow was fishin in this cut and yow caught a whale? Wot did yow do with it?"
"I threw it back." the first one replies

Ah, but don't you see, according to kevin and some other slow learners, by virtue of the illegal signal being on the frequencies before any legal signals, that establishes their right to be there, therefore you must not use those frequencies......NOT!!! By the fact that the FCC has never so much as issued even a warning notice to a licensed ham for transmitting on a frequency that is in use by an illegal signal establishes a de facto rule that it is NOT againt the rules to transmit on top of such illegal signals.

No one ever said an illegal station could do anything about it. This is where so many went off topic. The dispute, was some claiming you may break the law merely because of an illegal station's presence...as was the case with the claim of running maximum power to deliberately interfere,,,,,it's illegal, for several reasons already stated. What you failed to ask H in your last conversation with him, is if there are any exceptions whatsoever when a hammie may deliberately intererfere with....ANYTHING.
Seems like you ought ask him this, Jerry. Illegal stations presence do NOT absolve you from current law, and the law is cut and dry, nowhere citing an exception as to when one may run maximum power to cause a delberate interference to an illegal station.

>After all, the driver gonna get PO'ed and

And those not licensed for hammie bands shouldn't be there unless they want more problems than they can handle.

If a legal station indeed deliberately QRMed another legal station, then said operation can/will be cited for malicious interference. If there is a "bandit" on the frequency, there is no protection accrued to said illegal.
Jerry

Hehe,,,I get what you're saying, I just disagree. In no manner may a legal station intentionally and deliberately interfere,,,period. Again, an illegal station's presence does not make illegal actions (by the hammie) legal.

Agreed.

Not necessarily. If you are deliberately "jamming" (which WAS the word used originally), you are now illegal. Same as running max power to hold a QSO.

No,that's not what you orignaly said. Go back to your original claim,,you said "station", NOT signal. Huge difference.

And as you were told before, an illegal station that has an emergency call does not make the STATION any more legal because of the nature of the transmission.

January 6, 2003Toledo Amateur Radio Club7234 Latcha RoadPerrysburg, OH 43551 Attn: Trustee John C. Lagger, AA8XS RE: Warning Notice--Amateur Repeater W8RZM Dear Mr. Lagger: Our records indicate that you are the trustee for the above repeater system. Enclosed are recordings of violations on the repeater by N8WWM. The transmissions continued for a considerable time and there was no evidence of a control operator. Since you are the trustee for the repeater, it is important for you to understand that you are responsible for its proper operation. The decision to operate a repeater is a totally voluntarily one. Repeaters are a convenience in the Amateur Radio Service, not a necessity. A repeater is a station just like any other station; and under Section 97.205 of the Commission's rules, all stations must have a licensee and control operator. Under Sections 97.103(a) and 97.105, control operators must ensure the immediate proper operation of a station, regardless of the type of station control. Furthermore, "automatic" control does not mean "unattended" operation. Unattended operation is not authorized under the rules. The repeater licensee/trustee is responsible for all recurring violations and violations that are not inadvertent, just as a licensee is responsible for a base station HF station operation in the licensee's home. You must prevent recurring and deliberate violations on the repeater by locking rule violators out, using tones, warning users, limiting its operation, or taking whatever steps necessary commensurate with your responsibility as the licensee of the station. If you are unable to do so, then you must shut down your station. If you are unwilling or unable to prevent violations on the W8RZM repeater, then your operator and station license will be subject to enforcement action by the Commission. Such action may include monetary forfeiture, operator license suspension or station license revocation. We request that you respond within 20 days of the date of this letter and indicate what action you have taken to prevent additional rule violations on the repeater. Please call me at 717-338-2502 if you have any questions about this inquiry. CC: FCC, Western Regional Director

According to the Commission's records, these devices have not received an FCC equipment authorization which is required for Citizens Band transmitters marketed in the United States.

3. Section 302(b) of the Act2 provides ``[n]o person shall manufacture, import, sell, offer for sale, or ship devices or home electronic equipment and systems, or use devices, which fail to comply with regulations promulgated pursuant to this section.'' Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules3 provides that ``... no person shall sell or lease, or offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or lease), or import, ship or distribute for the purpose of selling or leasing or offering for sale or lease, any radio frequency device unless: (1) In the case of a device subject to certification, such device has been authorized by the Commission in accordance with the rules in this chapter and is properly identified and labeled ....'' Mr. David P. Pace, Jr. d.b.a. Pacetronics / Pace Marketing's offer for sale of these devices violates both sections.

4. Mr. David P. Pace, Jr. d.b.a. Pacetronics / Pace Marketing marketed these devices as amateur transceivers. The Commission has evaluated radiofrequency devices similar to those listed in paragraph 2 and concluded that the devices at issue are not only amateur radios but can easily be altered for use as Citizens Band devices as well. A CB transmitter is a transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station authorized for the CB service, and it must be certificated by the FCC prior to marketing or importation.4 The Commission has further concluded that these devices fall within the definition of a CB transmitter and therefore cannot legally be imported or marketed in the United States. See Response from the Commission's General Counsel to U.S. Customs Service dated May 17, 1999, 14 FCC Rcd 7797 (1999).

5. Additionally, dual use CB and amateur radios of the kind at issue here may not be certificated under the Commission's rules. Section 95.655(a) of the rules5 states: ``. . . . ([CB] Transmitters with frequency capability for the Amateur Radio Services . . . . will not be certificated.)'' See also FCC 88-256, 1988 WL 488084 (August 17, 1988). This clarification was added to explicitly foreclose the possibility of certification of dual use CB and amateur radios, see id., and thereby deter use by CB operators of frequencies allocated for amateur radio use.

6. Furthermore, the Commission has revised Section 2.1204(a)(5) of its rules6 to prohibit all marketing and/or offering for sale in the United States of such devices even when the purchaser(s) had provided assurances that the transceivers are being bought solely for export. ALL DOMESTIC MARKETING OF SUCH DEVICES VIOLATES THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934, AS AMENDED, AND THE COMMISSION'S RULES.

7. In addition to the marketing of the non-certified transceivers addressed above, Mr. David P. Pace, Jr. d.b.a. Pacetronics / Pace Marketing is warned that Section 302(b) of the Act2, and Section

2.815(c) of the Commission's Rules7 requires FCC Type Acceptance (or Certification) of External Radio Frequency Power Amplifiers (or amplifier kits) capable of operation on any frequency or frequencies below 144 MHz. Furthermore, Section 2.815(b) of the Commission's Rules8 prohibits the marketing of External Radio Frequency Power Amplifiers (or amplifier kits) capable of operation on any frequency or frequencies between 24 and 35 MHz.

8. Subsequent violations of the Communications Act and/or of the Commission's Rules may subject the violator to substantial monetary forfeitures not to exceed $11,000 for each such violation or each day of a continuing violation,9 seizure of equipment through in rem forfeiture action, and criminal sanctions including imprisonment.10

9. Mr. David P. Pace, Jr. d.b.a. Pacetronics / Pace Marketing may request a personal interview at the closest FCC location to its place of business,11 namely:

Federal Communications Commission
9330 LBJ Freeway, Suite 1170
Dallas, Texas 75243-3470

which can be contacted by telephone at 214-575-6361. They must schedule this interview to take place within 14 days of the date of this citation. Mr. David P. Pace, Jr. d.b.a. Pacetronics / Pace Marketing may submit a written statement within 14 days of the date of this Citation to the same address. Any written statement should specify what actions have been taken to correct the violation outlined above. When corresponding with the Commission, case number EB-03-DL-143 should be referenced.
10. Any statement or information provided may be used by the Commission to determine if further enforcement action is required.12 Any knowingly or willfully false statement made in reply to this notice is punishable by fine or imprisonment.13

This is not the end.
This is not the beginning of the end.
This is, the end of the beginning..

(For bonus points, what movie?)

It does seem like a step in the right direction.
It weakens all their regulatory efforts, when they allow something like this to continue for years.
At best, it will get rid of the "off the shelf" rigs, and force them to buy ham rigs, or do it underground with mods.

Only some serious field enforcement will make an impact on the use.

Slow learners, eh? What about those who already know trying to communicate a reality to those who are two stubborn to learn. You know there are three kinds of people in the world:

Those who learn by listening
Those who learn by watching
Those who learn by urinating on the electric fence for themselves.

Which are you JJ?

How much time have you spent researching FCC cases to find out that the FCC has never issued a warning notice? If you are heard by the FCC or the FCC AUX you will be sited for interference, period.

No.

You flail away at him for "interpreting the law" then you do exactly the same thing. You make the assertation that the FCC wouldn't do anything.
You are wrong, as a memeber of the FCC aux we are instructed to report ANY and ALL interfering stations. Get a copy of The FCC Rule Book, it's all spelled out in there.

Please site the rule that allows you to interfere with unlicensed stations.

There should be no significant "seconds harmonic." But then if you are next door to him you will most likely be able to hear his 60db down second harmonic.

Playing music on the ham bands is specifically spelled out as illegal. To interfere with someone playing music is also illegal.

I also doubt very seriously that someone would be playing music on the bands during an emergency. You are grasping at straws now.

No the "severity" of the crime is not relevant here. What is relevant is whether or not it would be legal simply because the drive did not have a license. If it was legal to run him off the road simply because he didn't belong there then the "deadly weapon" charge would have no basis since there was no crime committed.

Yes he does have recourse. You would be showing gross negligence by running him off the road even if it was an "accident." This sort of thing (accidents) happen around here all the time. We have about 15% of the people driving around here without a license. If I am in an accident with one of them and it's my fault then my insurance company pays. If course the other driver gets sited for driving without a license. But him driving without a license does not lessen my liability. It's the same principle with interference, his "lack of license" in no way lessens your liability for causing interference to him. It's still illegal.

RESTRUCTURING: MORSE CODE AND THE FCC - ROUND II

Well we told you it was going to happen and it has. We are talking about the next round of rule making requests to the FCC on the topic of what to do about Morse code testing. Most of this group want to keep some form of CW test. Amateur Radio Newsline's Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, takes a look at what the FCC wants you to read and comment on:

If you were not happy with the first round of Morse code rule making requests, maybe you will find something more to your liking in this latest batch of seven that the FCC has released for public comment.

We have already covered the most prominent of them. That being the one from FISTS -- the international Morse code preservation society. FISTS wants the code retained and all aspects of the ham radio exam process made allot tougher. And in this area, FISTS is not alone.

In is petition, Frank Napurano, K2OKA, calls Morse the purest, most accurate, efficient, reliable and economical form of radio communications ever devised. He tells the FCC that its essential to keep at least the current 5 word per minute CW test in the interest of public safety, the preservation of a radio art and as a tribute of support for a prized and respected avocation.

Also in favor of keeping some form of Morse exam is the Puerto Rico Amateur Radio League. While it wants the FCC to do away with the current 5 word per minute test for General class it says to keep it for those going for an Extra ticket.

James Roux, W4YA, wants the FCC to eliminate the 5 word per minute code test for a General class license, but like the Puerto Rico Amateur Radio League would require Extra class applicants prove they can do Morse at 15 words per minute. Roux also wants to cut the number of licenses to only two. Under his proposal nobody would loose current privileges but only the General and Extra class would continue to be issued.

Meantime, Robert Rightsell, AE4FA and Harry Kholer, NZ0PU also want 5 word per minute Morse testing continued but would institute a points score system for passing a ham radio exam. Under the Rightsell / Kholer plan, an applicant could earn up to 24 points on Morse testing.

And Joseph Speroni, AH0A, has a novel idea. Only test hams in Morse who want to use the mode. Speroni would have the FCC delete the CW exam for those who want to operate only phone. If a ham wants to operate High Frequency Morse, Speroni says they should pass the current 5 word per minute exam.

Last but by no means least comes Charles Young Jr, AG4YO. He is asking the FCC to delete the 5 word per minute Morse exam for the Technician Plus license, but keep it as a requirement for General and Amateur Extra exams. And like the other petitioners, Young has some specific ideas regarding other aspects of ham radio licensing as well.

These seven petitions have been designated as RM 10805 through 10811. Commentary cutoff on all of them is Friday, November 7th.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, reporting.

You can comment on one or all of these rule making petitions by taking your browser to the FCC Electronic Comment Filing System. Its in cyberspace at www.fcc.gov/cgb/ecfs. (ARNewsline™ from FCC website)

RESTRUCTURING: QRZ SAYS KEEP THE DISCUSSION ON TRACK

In a related story, the operators of the QRZ.com website have drawn a proverbial line in the sand. They say that any attempts to take a Forum discussion that is not directly related to the code versus no code debate and turn it into such will result in those posting being removed. The operators of the website say that this is not a stance by QRZ.com either for or against Morse code. Rather it is a their way to keep a given subject being discussed on track. The QRZed website is in cyberspace at www.qrz.com. (QRZ)

RESTRUCTURING: PNG GOES CODE-FREE

I'm Don Wilbanks, AE5DW, with breaking news out of the South Pacific. Dateline Papua New Guinea where that nations Telecommunications Administration, PANGTEL, has declared Papua New Guinea to be the latest nation to become code free. This as it orders the deletion of Morse Code from the qualifications necessary for its amateurs to have access to the High Frequency bands.

According to Rick Warnett, P29KFS, the decision to drop Morse was actually made back on June 10 th but not widely publicized until now. June 10 th was before the 2003 World Radiocommunications Conference that decided Morse testing was no longer mandatory world wide and retaining it would be the decision of each individual administration.

Warnett, who is the IARU representative for the Papua New Guinea Amateur Radio Society says that the official announcement will take place within the next few days. When it comes, Warnett says that some 30 to 40 new Papua New Guinea full call hams will have international communication available to them. (Q-News)

DX PROBLEMS: A FOLLOW-UP ON ANNOBON ISLAND - 3C0V

A little more information has surfaced on why a long awaited Dxpedition suddenly left the air. Jeramy Boot, G4NJH, has the details:

The Spanish and German group that had been operating as 3C0V from Annobon Island off the West Coast of Africa were forced to close down early in the morning of last Saturday, the 4th of October. The DXpedition was scheduled to have continued until the 10th of October.

Gabriel 'Gaby' Mardiros, OD5NJ, the 'pilot' for the 3C0V DXpedition, says that the group is "fine" but that they had received "a serious warning not to use any of their radios". The reason for the enforced closure was not yet known."

Some reports indicated that local authorities had given the DXpeditioners less than 24 hours to pack up and get off the island. More on this story as information is made available. (GB2RS)

WRTC: 2006 GAMES IN BRAZIL

It has been announced that the next World Radiosport Team Championship, or 'WRTC', will be held in Brazil in 2006. The last WRTC event took place in Finland in July last year.

WRTC brings together the top HF contesters from all over the world to compete on - as far as is possible - a 'level playing field'. WRTC 2006 will take place in Florianopolis, capital of Santa Catarina State in southern Brazil. The event is open to everyone: competitors and spectators alike.

RADIO RULES: WORLD'S BROADCASTERS JOIN ANTI-BPL CHORUS

A subcommittee of an International Telecommunication Union panel of technical experts responsible for terrestrial broadcasting issues has joined a growing chorus of concerned parties about the interference potential of power line telecommunication. According to the ARRL Letter, ITU Radiocommunication Sector Sub Working Group 6E1 has been looking at BPL. Now it has expressed the view that interference produced by systems employing powerline data transmission as well as by Industrial, Scientific and Medical equipment and short-range devices, will compromise broadcast reception. (ARRL, CGC)

RESCUE RADIO: BPL VS. FIRE RADIO COMMUNICATIONS

Meantime, hams who are also firefighters or have access to the local fire Department should consider enlisting their help in fighting the rollout of Broadband over Powerlines. This, due to the heavy use of the 33 and 45 MHz radio bands by fire departments.

Writing to the QRZ.com super site, Jim Walsh, K3JIM, says that some fire departments are not technically savvy and think that interference is really blind spots in the radio coverage. Walsh, who is a firefighter and truck engineer Red Lion, Pennsylvania, says that broadband interference is not easily recognizable to fire personnel as say an interfering DX station may be to the trained ear of a ham radio operator. He says that the fire service is used to dead spots and may not know why they exist.

Walsh cites one situation in the area where he lives and works. He says that it is well known that when in the vicinity of certain gas station convenience stores in his area that one cannot use the radio for a few hundred meters. He says that in this case the problem is the Point of Sale system that records the gas transactions and that the lines running to the pumps are not shielded and radiate computer hash like an antenna.

K3JIM has lots more to say about the problem BPL can be to low-band fire radio systems. You can read it all on line at www.qrz.com (K3JIM via qrz.com)

ENFORCEMENT: YOU ARE NOT SUPPOSED TO OPERATE THERE

In regulatory news, two hams have been asked to explain why they have been heard operating on law enforcement frequencies. The FC's Daryl Duckworth, NN0W, has more:

Duckworth: "Tom Christman, KB2NAV, of Albany New York, has received an inquirey as to operations on the Albany County Sheriff's Department emergency frequencies without legitimate purpose last December.

Along similar lines, Joseph Hutchins, KG4SXD, of Swannanoa, North Carolina, is being asked about operations on police frequencies in February of this year. That of the Black Mountain Police Department in Black Mountain North Carolina."

Both hams were given 20 days to respond to the FCC's query. If the agency finds that rules have been violated, each ham could face a fine of $7,500 to $10,000, license suspension and revocation.

ENFORCEMENT: AMATEUR TOLD TO KEEP HAM GEAR OFF CB

The FCC has written to James Perryman, KC8KOU, of Toledo Ohio. This, regarding continued complaints involving his alleged operation of non type accepted radio gear on the 11 meter band. Again, the FCC's Daryl Duckworth, NN0W:

Duckworth: "The letter went on to say that the operation of non-certified equipment on CB frequencies, such as Amateur equipment and linear amplifiers will result in a monetary forfeiture in the $7500 to $10,000 area, as well as the in-reim seizure of all non-certified equipment in cooperation with the United States Attorney in his jurisdiction."

--

The FCC also told Perryman that his station is subject to inspection at any time by Commission personnel.

ENFORCEMENT: YOU CANNOT SAY THAT ON THE RADIO

Meantime, Federal regulators have announced plans to fine a Detroit radio station $27,500. This, for an allegedly indecent broadcast on a popular afterboon show back in January of 2002.

In a Notice of Apparent Liability to Monetary Forfeiture, the FCC said a broadcast on Infinity Broadcasting's WKRK-FM included explicit and graphic sexual and excretory references during separate discussions with nine separate people. Such language is banned under FCC rules.

Infinity was given 30 days to contest the notice. In earlier filings with the FCC, the company argued that no penalty could be assessed. This is because Infinity believes that the FCC's definition of indecency is unconstitutional.

ENFORCEMENT: LA REPEATER OWNERS ORGANIZE AGAINST ALLEGED UNLICENSED OPERATOR

Repeater owner operators in the Los Angeles Californias area are taking action to keep transmissions allegedly coming from Jack Gerritsen, the former KG6IRO, from being retransmitted. In are rare show of cooperation, system owners and their control operators are taking repeaters off of the air rather than permit the signals from a station identifying with the call sign KG6IRO call sign from being rebroadcast.

If the name Jack Gerritsen sounds familiar its because we have reported on hin several times before. Gerritsen was licensed for a very brief period back in 2001. His ham ticket was set aside by the FCC's Wireless Telecommunications Bureau after the agency learned that Gerritsen had been convicted in 2000 on charges of interfering with Los Angeles Police Department radio transmissions. Gerritsen recieved a jail term for the interference conviction. He was paroled but sent back to prison after allegations surfaced that he had been operating a radio transmitter without a license. He was released before serving his full sentence as the result of a Federal court order dealing with overcrowding in California state prisons. His application for a ham radio license remains in the FCC's pending file and a hearing on the matter will be scheduled at some future date.

Be that as it may, Los Angeles area repeater owners are not waiting for the FCC to move in the matter. They have taken matters into their own hands and are acting to keep the signal claiming to be KG6IRO from being repeated. (ARNewsline™)

HAM RADIO BUSINESS: 73 MAGAZINE FOLDS

73 Magazine is the latest casulty in the weak world-wide ham radio business economy. On Monday, October 6th, founder Wayne Green, W2NSD, e-mail several friends to tell them that 73 Magazine has ceased publication after completing 43 years.

The reason for 73 going away? Green claims that the hobby is slowly dying as a result of a lack of new hams. In turn the the industry that supports Amateur Radio is fading away as well. Green says that without sufficient advertising the magazine couldn't continue.

--

Green: "The book sales have kept 73 going for the last few years, but book sales have dwindeled way, way down and there was no way to keep 73 going. The ad sales are down and the reciepts from the ad sales are down even weorse than the ads."

W2NSD says that it was an interesting 43 years and that he hopes to write about it some time. In the meantime he plans to continuing his essays on his website for those subscribers who mainly bought the magazine to read them. Thats in cyberspace at www.waynegreen.com.

No word what will happen to those with outstanding subscriptions to 73, especially hams who bought lifetime subs at a bargain price when the magazine first started up. Green always said it would last through his lifetime or that of the purchaser, but it looks as if W2NSD and a number of lifetime subscribers may have outlived 73. We expected it of Green. His phonetics are W-2-Never-Say-Die.

You can hear W2NSD talk about the demise of 73 on this weeks RAIN Report. Its available on-line at www dot rainreport dot com or by telephone at 847-827-7246. (ARNewsline™)

HAM RADIO BUSINESS: NEW KIDS HAM RADIO MAGAZINE TO BE PUBLISHED

If the ham business is as bad as Wayne Green says, you would not know it by Larry Mahlberg AA0BY. As 73 sails into the sunset, Mahlberg has announced his own new ham radio magazine targeting the younger generation.

According to Mahlberg, he and his crew are putting together a brand new monthly publication called "Hamtastic Kids" that will debuet on November 15th and be available by subscription. To get it started, AA0BY is asking your help by submitting material for publicatoon such as Amateur Radfio poems, stories, puzzles and even ham radio recipes. He is also looking for articles written by kids on such topics as Morse code, DX'ing, ragchewing, fox hunting, contesting and hamfests.

But thats not all. The Hamtastic Kids is offering a free years subscription for best logo that a youngster submits for use in the Magazine. Submissions of logos, articles and information requests go to Hamtastic Kids, in care of Larry Mahlberg, AA0BY, P.O Box 1634

RESCUE RADIO: APRS JOINS THE CHARLES REGATTA

Almost two decades after it was developed by an Amateur Radio operator, Automatic Position Reporting System equipment is being used for the first time by the hams on board the rescue launches at the Head of the Charles Regatta. Amateur Radio Newsline's Norm Seeley, KI7UP, reports:

Bob Bruninga, WB4APR, is considered the father of the Automatic Position Reporting System thats known in ham radio circles by the acronym of four letters APRS. And from October 17th through the 19th a team of up to 30 operators will be on the air using it and other modes to operate a safety communications net for the annual Head of the Charles Regatta.

According to Bruce Pigott, KC1US, the addition of APRS is very significant because it allows automatic tracking of a ham radio station by sending Global Positioning Satellite information along with the voice or other data on the radio signal. This should permit precise dispatch of land and river emergency units to rendezvous with the launches.

KC1US says that communications coverage begins three hours before the first race on Saturday and an hour before the first race on Sunday. This, will allow medical and public safety communications coverage of practice runs and gathering crowds of spectators.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Norm Seeley, KI7UP.

This year's communications support covers all aspects of the regatta. This includes preparations, practice and competition for all three days of the event. (KC1US)

In D-X, TM9AF will be on the air through October 26th to celebrate the 25rh anniversary of the Auxerre Ham-Expo. About 20 operators will be on the air with the special callsign on 160 to 6 metres using CW, SSB, PSK, RTTY, and Slow Scan TV. They will also operate 2 meters to 1.2GHz on CW, SSB FM, RTTY, and ATV. If you make contact, Q-S-L as directed on the air. (GB2RS)

Stefano Frau, IS0WBT, says by way of e-mail that special event station ISZ0A will be on air during the upcoming CQ World Wide SSB contest. This on the on 25th and 26th of October. Stefano says that the operation will take place from Mt. Cresia in grid square JM49QG. Operation will be in the multi-multi catagory and the operators will be looking to talk to all of you. QSL direct to IS0MYN. (GB2RS)

THAT FINAL ITEM: DUTCH STUDY SUGGESTS ISSUES ACCOMPANY 3G CELL STATIONS

And finally, can cellular telephones make you more alert? Some researchers in the Netherlands think so. Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF, has more:

A study by Dutch researchers has found some interesting side effects from certain cellular telephone base station radiation. Initial results show that electromagnetic energy transmitted by base stations for the new third generation or 3 G wireless networks caused subjects in double-blind test groups to experience tingling sensations, get headaches and have feelings of nausea. On the other hand, when the same subjects were exposed to signals from current mobile networks, no negative impacts were found.

But here's the kicker. When the same people were exposed to both types of fields -- that being 3 G plus current networks -- cognitive functions including memory and response times showed measurable improvement. Put simply, the subjects became more alert when exposed to both fields. The report did not discuss the modulation schemes nor the specific RF power densities that were involved in the study, and obviously allot more research needs to be done before anything conclusive can be known.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF

Now it has to be pointed out that these are early results. As such, while they are interesting, are yet to be confirmed. You can read more in cyberspace at www.msnbc.com/news/974005.asp (CGC)

Aw, come on, that was a good question! Don't answer it by saying "there should be no significant 'seconds harmonic'", because there should be no illegal operators. If a ham interferes with a harmonic from a SW transmitter, regardless of whether it's supposed to be there or not, isn't he interfering with a signal that fits within the definition of "any transmission or communication"? Of course he is! Is he doing something illegal? According to you, yes. Now for the $64,000 question: If you are scouting for the FCC and detect said ham doing said act, are you going to cite him? You better, or you will be a hypocrite!

Well, now I know who to listen for and where....

The only part of your post that is correct is the fact that we cannot communicate with the illegal stations. Since you site Riley H. as the source for your assertion that the FCC would do nothing please show me where I can get a transcript of his speech.

Yes, I did meet/confront/talk to Doug Adair N8WWM at the findley Hamfest a few years ago, and at first I thought he was looking for trouble. But it turned out to be a very civil conversation between myself and him and there was a truce called, and as always, Doug never kept his end of the bargan and started his crap again, and I seen him at another hamfest, later on that year and him or one of his Pals from the AKC's got in here and started thier crap about me, again.... he claims he's not the offending party... I say, Yeah right... Anyhow, He or his AKC buddies never laid a finger on me, as they threatened to do, they're all a bunch of hot air, and all bark and no bite, they get thier jollies off of "screwing" with you people in here, and you guys take it! so, you get what you ask for... If you guys would KILLFILE all these people, they'd get bored and go do something else, but you all just keep on feeding their frenzy... Now, before any of the AKC's getting any stupid ideas... My Lawyer Levon King, who by the way is the mayor of the city of Allan Park, Mi is just waiting for another slander Posting, he's got everyone's name, address and other needed info... and has it a folder... so, just go ahead, mention my name again, dougie... I agree, but it's still a poor analogy.

>whether or not it would be legal simply because the drive did not have a

And that's where your analogy really deviates -- on the ham bands a licensed operator must use his call at regular intervals. Not so with driving. Driver A has no way of knowing that driver B is unlicensed. And as I pointed out before, since driver A can be charged with assault on driver B (as well as any of his passengers), the license issue is moot.

> If it was legal to run him off the road simply because he didn't Wrong. People still have rights even if they are on the wrong side of the law. That's why we don't shoot college kids picking mushrooms in the cow field, or blow away suspected car prowlers.

>Yes he does have recourse. You would be showing gross negligence by running

Depends on the circumstances.

You live in Texas, right? I'm suprised that rate is so low!

> If I am in an accident with >one of them and it's my fault then my insurance company pays.

And there is a good reason why -- if he is driving without a license, then he is probably also driving without insurance, and your insurance will be forced to pick up the tab on your uninsured motorist coverage (if you have it). And I don't know of any case where an insurance company knowingly paid out to an unlicensed driver regardless of fault. I'm sure it has happened, but probably just to avoid the cost of taking it to trial, as I don't think any court would rule in favor of the unlicensed driver. If you know of a case where it -has- happened, I'd like to see it.

> If course the

In many states it does. Probably not in Texas, tho.

> It's the same principle >with interference, his "lack of license" in no way lessens your liability

Like I said, that's a poor analogy.

Now you are dealing apples and oranges here. The rules governing law enforcement stations are quite a bit different from those governing amateur radio. For one, law enforcement stations MUST use equipment specifically designed for their service, nothing else. They transmit ONLY on specific frequencies, no others. They don't have to worry about interfering with other stations because there are none on THEIR frequencies. Yes, they have specifically license frequencies on which they may transmit. If they are allocated 460.405, 460.425 and 460.430 then they may transmit ONLY on those frequencies. If a person comes onto one of those frequencies then it is HE who is at fault and the question of interference is moot. HE is interfering with the law enforcement's radios and NEVER the other way around.

You are fishing again Jerry.

January 6, 2003Toledo Amateur Radio Club7234 Latcha RoadPerrysburg, OH 43551 Attn: Trustee John C. Lagger, AA8XS RE: Warning Notice--Amateur Repeater W8RZM Dear Mr. Lagger: Our records indicate that you are the trustee for the above repeater system. Enclosed are recordings of violations on the repeater by N8WWM. The transmissions continued for a considerable time and there was no evidence of a control operator. Since you are the trustee for the repeater, it is important for you to understand that you are responsible for its proper operation. The decision to operate a repeater is a totally voluntarily one. Repeaters are a convenience in the Amateur Radio Service, not a necessity. A repeater is a station just like any other station; and under Section 97.205 of the Commission's rules, all stations must have a licensee and control operator. Under Sections 97.103(a) and 97.105, control operators must ensure the immediate proper operation of a station, regardless of the type of station control. Furthermore, "automatic" control does not mean "unattended" operation. Unattended operation is not authorized under the rules. The repeater licensee/trustee is responsible for all recurring violations and violations that are not inadvertent, just as a licensee is responsible for a base station HF station operation in the licensee's home. You must prevent recurring and deliberate violations on the repeater by locking rule violators out, using tones, warning users, limiting its operation, or taking whatever steps necessary commensurate with your responsibility as the licensee of the station. If you are unable to do so, then you must shut down your station. If you are unwilling or unable to prevent violations on the W8RZM repeater, then your operator and station license will be subject to enforcement action by the Commission. Such action may include monetary forfeiture, operator license suspension or station license revocation. We request that you respond within 20 days of the date of this letter and indicate what action you have taken to prevent additional rule violations on the repeater. Please call me at 717-338-2502 if you have any questions about this inquiry. CC: FCC, Western Regional Director

Occasionally there are. And some LE agencies use shared freqs.

Hams have band limitations. And maybe you are forgetting another point, that many LE agencies have several freqs to use. Well, so do hams. And as LE is limited to the freqs capable by their radios, so are hams.

I can see no difference between the two (aside from the obvious). And from your own interpretation, it must be the illegal operator that interferes with the ham and NEVER the other way around, which is closer to the truth than a ham interfering with a freeloader.

Not true kevieboy, the FCC has monitored the 10 meter band with all the illegal signals, and has monitored hams transmitting over these illegal signals. They have never issued so much as a warning to any ham and I personally spoke with an FCC engineer at one of the monitoring stations and he confirmed that they would not site any ham for transmitting over these illegal signals. Now find something else to nit pick.

Make up your mind. First you say a ham cannot interfere with an unlicensed station, then you say don't worry as long as there is no "appearence" of intentional interference. Now either you can or you can't interfer with an unlicensed station, which is it?

The transmitting over an illegal signal by a licensed ham is not violating any law.

According to the mis-guided, if it fell within a ham band, and you are a licensed ham, you would be in violation of the rules if you transmitted on that frequency. You would be interfering with some stations second harmonic signal and as those same mis-guided folks say, the rules say any signal, and that second harmonic is any signal. See how silly their mis-guided inteperatation of the rules are.

According to the Commission's records, these devices have not received an FCC equipment authorization which is required for Citizens Band transmitters marketed in the United States.

3. Section 302(b) of the Act2 provides ``[n]o person shall manufacture, import, sell, offer for sale, or ship devices or home electronic equipment and systems, or use devices, which fail to comply with regulations promulgated pursuant to this section.'' Section 2.803(a)(1) of the Rules3 provides that ``... no person shall sell or lease, or offer for sale or lease (including advertising for sale or lease), or import, ship or distribute for the purpose of selling or leasing or offering for sale or lease, any radio frequency device unless: (1) In the case of a device subject to certification, such device has been authorized by the Commission in accordance with the rules in this chapter and is properly identified and labeled ....'' Mr. David P. Pace, Jr. d.b.a. Pacetronics / Pace Marketing's offer for sale of these devices violates both sections.

4. Mr. David P. Pace, Jr. d.b.a. Pacetronics / Pace Marketing marketed these devices as amateur transceivers. The Commission has evaluated radiofrequency devices similar to those listed in paragraph 2 and concluded that the devices at issue are not only amateur radios but can easily be altered for use as Citizens Band devices as well. A CB transmitter is a transmitter that operates or is intended to operate at a station authorized for the CB service, and it must be certificated by the FCC prior to marketing or importation.4 The Commission has further concluded that these devices fall within the definition of a CB transmitter and therefore cannot legally be imported or marketed in the United States. See Response from the Commission's General Counsel to U.S. Customs Service dated May 17, 1999, 14 FCC Rcd 7797 (1999).

5. Additionally, dual use CB and amateur radios of the kind at issue here may not be certificated under the Commission's rules. Section 95.655(a) of the rules5 states: ``. . . . ([CB] Transmitters with frequency capability for the Amateur Radio Services . . . . will not be certificated.)'' See also FCC 88-256, 1988 WL 488084 (August 17, 1988). This clarification was added to explicitly foreclose the possibility of certification of dual use CB and amateur radios, see id., and thereby deter use by CB operators of frequencies allocated for amateur radio use.

6. Furthermore, the Commission has revised Section 2.1204(a)(5) of its rules6 to prohibit all marketing and/or offering for sale in the United States of such devices even when the purchaser(s) had provided assurances that the transceivers are being bought solely for export. ALL DOMESTIC MARKETING OF SUCH DEVICES VIOLATES THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934, AS AMENDED, AND THE COMMISSION'S RULES.

I asked Frank not to do it, as I was kind enough not to do it to him.
He initiated the practiced behavior in our exchanges, then cried to me when I did it in return to him. He continued to selectively snip for some time after my asking him to cease, and you had no problem with said behavior at the time. That, according to your own past words, means that you condone such behavior. Taking issue only when another does not only illustrates why you are viewed the manner in which you are, but illustrates your self-contradictions. That you fail to recognize or see those of us that seek out mindless entertainment fodder and find it in

Well, not much. For some time FCC was (is) stymied by glitches in the law that allowed such sales. The attorneys for FCC (including RH, btw) have been working to fix this hole that the dealers have been slipping thru. It doesn't however that these "busts" won't continue or even increase (I hope). They HAVE made some progress and (for example) Flying J's I have gassed up at have removed the exports from the shelves. Now, the ones I have visited stock only the Cobra line.

As for modifying ham rigs to operate on CB, believe it or not, most hams don't even care if you do that; I don't!
The issue is to remove the offending, illegal radios from use on 10 Meters.
Keep 'em on the 40 channels, and it becomes a moot point AFAIK.

No. A legal station cannot interfere with a bandit if for no other reason that the illegal station IS illegal to start with! So, if the licensed station keys up over a bandit and begins a QSO with another licensed station, then there is NO liability accrued to said LEGAL station even if he is aware there is an illegal station (yelling "AAUUUUUUOOO") in the background! As I said in another post, I can see it now---an illegal operator calls Mr Hollingsworth and says, "Mr. agent, sir, I wuz tryin' to work skip on one of them "funny" channels, and one of them meany hammies kept talking over me". What do you think the result would be? Really. Let common sense prevail. Yes, what that rule is saying is that a LEGAL station may not interfere deliberately with another LEGAL station. It is assumed that all operations are to be done according to the rules and the issue of an illegal station having "rights" or protection against interference is absurd.

Respectfully,

Jerry

OK. by what you say, illegal drivers get run off the road on a regular basis AND by law enforcement! Ever hear of the "PIT" maneuver? So they have "legal recourse"?

You ought to watch COPS once in awhile. Think the bank robber, the car thief, or an unlicensed driver (that runs) has "recourse" because HE is the lawbreaker?
I don't THINK so!!!

Just as they have no standing against legal stations operating within their assigned band and rules, the illegal station has no "rights" to protection against said legal operators. CALL the lawyer that knows---Riley

?????????? Riley lives in Gettysburg, PA where his FCC office is. He is originally from Rock Hill, SC. He is a career FCC attorney. AND as long as that full legal limit is interferring with the illegal station and not other legal stations, it don't matter. The issue then would interference to another LICENSED ham. I hear RTTY and CW signals on 28.085 all the time and you don't, have not, and will not hear about hams bothering bandit stations on the RainReport. Privately, I betcha it would be funny to RH. And yes, the statement was made that illegal signals/stations can be ignored with impunity. The only thing will happen is an operator will get notified if he bothers another LICENSED station. Any other interpretation is absurd.

Jerry

(the rule about power says that one must use only the power necessary to establish and maintain contact. Is it enforced? Hardly ever.) It doesn't set a particular limit up to the 1500 watts allowed.

If a hams wishes to operate high power, he may do so even while transmitting OVER an illegal signal/station. While t here ARE rules governing power, they are mostly discressionary (sic).
Again, it assumes that a LEGAL station is operating within the rules of the service, not causing malicious interference to another licensed station, and his use of power does not cause grief to another LEGAL operator. And that means that if I decide to "test" on 28.085 AM with 500 watts or 1500 watts SSB, or call a CQ even where there is an illegal station present, you will never find a case where a ham has been cited for such. Betcha.

That's a big "if", DouGay. And a huge assumption on your part. Which proves, once again, that you don't know anything.

What does > anything < you post have to do with CB? I don't even read the "Rain" report, it doesn't apply here at all; it applies to HAM RADIO, dimbulb. I've never so much as mentioned it.

What does apply here is that > you < are a FEDERAL CRIMINAL and you're acting like a Keystone CB Cop. We all know that > you < are a repeater jammer and a pervert, thus you (like your alter-ego Aanal Aaron) have zero credibility.

Please hold your head up high and blow your brains out! We'll stand on the sidelines and cheer.

Have you tried re-reading what Riley Hollingsworth said, and comprehending it? Of course not, you are obcessed with what you believe, even if you haven't got a clue (and you haven't). You're also obcessed with your perverted sexual fantasies. I guess we know who the "faggot keyclown" really is: DouGay!

Bingo!

It's on cable this week.
I preferred the book, but the movie dosen't suck.
In the book, the deaders were being harvested for their organs.

From what I read, these were the "dual" ham and CB radios, which never could be type accepted.

They would never be legal on the CB band, nor type accepted for sale in the ham bands either.

I fail to see the point in that.
Because of firewalls, they cannot rely on a failure to respond meaning that nobody is there. Surely, the data flow should tell them that someone is there, and using the connection.
The only real point I can see is to see if your system is open, as they must already know that you are there.

A telescopic antenna will have resistance between each section, reducing the efficiency. If the antenna is similar to car radio antennas, with nothing but friction to hold the sections up and make the connection, the perfomance may not be too good.
The best option is a single piece steel type, although I imagine that they can get in the way a bit.

Can you get 102" telescopic mobile antennas?

That depends upon who it is allocated to.
The authorities always have their priorities. If someone stamps on a few Amateurs, unless someone in the relevent department has a score to settle, it may be allowed to continue. However, stamp on a Government system which they are trying to use, and you can be pretty sure that they will squash you like a fly.

It can be the same with Police... people may report a break in and find that the police will not even turn out to deal with it. But, break a speed limit, drive with a faulty light, or fiddle a few dollars from the tax man, and you will be hunted down like a dog and made to pay.

There have been some high profile cases here in the UK... a woman who paid for parking, got the sticker, placed it in the window... then, when it fell off the screen, she got taken to court for "failure to display".
An Ambulance driver, who got busted for speeding while carrying out his duty, and delivering an organ across the country (there is a time limit before it is useless). The police knew what he was doing, why he needed to rush, but took him to court anyway.
Both cases were dropped at the court - after public money had been used to take it that far.

And now, police have knocked on someone's door, asked to check over his vehicle parked outside... and then busted him for not having water in the windscreen washer bottle.

A while back, there was a sudden interest in Brit stars who the Tax Office decided to accuse of evasion. They got one or two busted in court, but the comedian Ken Dodd (known for his "Diddy Men" characters) got cleared by the court. They say he now has two new Diidy Men... Diddy pay, and Diddy Hell.

I agree that it is wrong that some people get protected by the law, while other's are allowed to suffer - but that seems to be the way the system works. The question may not be what can they do for you... but what will they get out of it if they do.

Brainbuster.

Speaking of yourself in the third person now, eh? About due to hatch a new

Don't waste your time, you see Dave, that there is DouGay Adairierre N8WWM, known pederast and repeater jammer. He doesn't have any function. Period.

I believe I stated that those radios have > never < been legal for use on CB. However, amateur use does not require type acceptance. Some of the Rangers listed are sold as 10 meter radios, and are perfectly legal for that use. Too bad your perverted obsession distorts your grasp of reality, DouGay.

Nothing you build requires type acceptance, but if you are going to sell it commercially, it must qualify.

Notice the ads for new radios where they state that it hasn't been FCC approved etc etc.

By default windows has quite a few ports open that aren't dependant on the protocols that are installed. Installing applications can open more ports up. Adding a controller for lighting control using your computer opens port 5000 (upnp) which is bad idea to leave hanging open to the outside world.

I see that quite often on my T1's, they have monitors that check the connections. They don't monitor traffic, they just look for a live connections.

Illegal transmissions are treated the same as "birdies" from your tv set or router, noisy ignition on cars and the russian woodpecker, they don't exist.

Old news. A few dealers and/or truckstops get busted every year or so.

What's your point?

At least a few of those Rangers are marketed as ten meter radios, and advertised as such in amateur magazines. And > any < of those radios are usable by amateurs on ten (or 12) meters.

Not a major problem, Jerry. Except by a few mental midgets who would like to believe otherwise and seem capable of making a mountain out of a molehill.

You want "intruders" off ten meters? USE IT! They won't have a chance.

Precisely -- I don't have a killfile at all! I just ignore the troll. But technical topics are scarce lately, so I gotta look for entertainment somewhere else -- and Cranium is always good for a laugh!
